Smuggler's Plots End In Jailing

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Francis Patrick Ahern — a man who tried to wheel and deal in multi-million dollar schemes, including gun-running — ended up Thursday as just another loser.

The 48-year-old Victoria man stood up in a New York district court and drew an 18-month jail term for conspiring to smuggle out of the U.S. enough weapons to equip a small army.

A co-accused, Dr. Anthony Morelli of Newport Beach, Calif., got the same sentence.

The jailing of Ahern and Morelli ended a joint investigation by top Canadian and U.S. law enforcement agencies — an investigation which was approved at the highest level of the U.S. government.

The investigation was launched after undercover U.S. customs agents suspected a top organized crime figure of illegally dealing in arms.

The man — who has not been publicly identified — holds a controlling interest in a large arms manufacturing company in New Jersey which is reported to be in financial difficulties.

Although Ahern went to jail, mainly as a result of the work of a customs agent who posed as a Latin American revolutionary, the organized crime figure remains at large.

A spokesman for the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit in Victoria said the arms deal was initiated in Winnipeg late last year.

Two Winnipeg men, Barry Dennis Gunn, 36, a chartered accountant, and Dr. Alexander Avurusi Apaya, 44, a physician originally from the Sudan, have been charged with conspiring to break U.S. federal laws. They have pleaded not guilty and are awaiting trial in Winnipeg.

The undercover agent who represented himself as a Latin American revolutionary originally ordered $5.5 million worth of arms including tanks and aircraft, but the order was later pared to half that amount.

CLEU became involved in the case on Jan. 11 when RCMP national criminal intelligence in Winnipeg asked officers here to check out a phone number in connection with an undercover arms investigation.

The number was traced to Ahern's residence at 1-1426 Gladstone.

Police suspected Ahern as early as 1972 of being involved in illicit arms deals.

Last May his name came up in connection with a cache of 114 revolvers and handguns that U.S. customs officials discovered secreted in the door panels of a 1976 Dodge being shipped out of Houston, Texas, bound for Jordan.

The car was shipped in the name of Ahmid Mohammed Rashid, but the shipper on the invoice was Francis P. Ahern Shipping and Trading Co. of Victoria.

Ahern, interviewed by police, denied any knowledge of the arms and said he thought the contract was to export cement. He also denied giving Rashid authority to use his company name and since police had no evidence to the contrary charges were never laid, the CLEU spokesman said.

A warrant was issued for the arrest of Rashid but he fled the U.S. and is now somewhere in the Middle East.

On Jan. 13, two days after CLEU received the phone number, Ahern and another Victoria businessman flew to Winnipeg. Police had them under surveillance the entire time.

2 Rail Unions Veto Pact

MONTREAL (CP) — Two rail unions broke ranks and refused today to sign a national contract negotiated last February by the Associated Railway Unions (ARU) and the country's major railways.

The International Association of Machinists and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, representing about 7,500 workers between them, indicated they wouldn't sign the agreement despite the results of a national ratification vote, ARU officials said.

Members of the machinists and the electrical workers voted to reject the contract, but when the results were pooled Thursday with tallies from the other 15 unions which make up the ARU, the contract was approved by 52 per cent of all rail workers.

Election Unlikely In June—Trudeau

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau indicated Thursday there probably will not be a federal election in June.

Trudeau said at his weekly news conference that he thinks Parliament should sit at least "a few more days" to approve a bill allowing trials in both official languages.

Thursday was the likely day for the prime minister to announce an election for June 26, the last possible election date in that month. Prime ministers usually allow 60 days between the election call and voting day to give the chief electoral officer time to prepare.

Trudeau said his personal view is that it would be worthwhile to have Parliament continue its work on the language bill and other proposed legislation. That bill has yet to receive second reading and possibly will be before the Commons today or early next week.

The prime minister was careful not to close off the possibility of an early election, in late June or early in July.

He met with the cabinet in regular session Thursday. Before the cabinet were the results of the latest Goldfarb survey. The results may have been more favorable than other recent surveys the Liberals had received, because the prime minister was in very good humor. He smiled frequently, joked with some questioners and generally displayed a much better humor than he did a week earlier at his press conference.

Earlier surveys commissioned by the Liberals, according to informed sources here, indicated unexpected party weakness in Ontario with the possibility of at least two cabinet ministers being defeated.

Although he dropped no more hints about the date, Trudeau did indicate that the country soon will be told whether an election will be held.

He said that if he thought the election should wait until the fall or next year, he would let people know. In fairness, he would tell people not to count on an early dissolution of Parliament.

Next week is too late to call a June 26 election. The prime minister will be looking at early July by that time.

Mid-summer elections are not popular and most observers think that if the vote is not called for July 10, the prime minister will wait for the fall. A July 10 election likely would be announced near the end of the second week in May.

The election also could be held July 3, in which case it would be announced toward the end of next week.

Federal elections are always held on a Monday.

Sagging $ Doubles M-B Profit

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., mainly as a result of the weakened Canadian dollar, doubled its first-quarter profits compared to the same period last year, company president Calvert Knudsen reported Thursday.

Speaking at the annual meeting of shareholders, Knudsen said net earnings for the first three months of 1978 were $16.9 million or 73 cents a share, compared to $8.2 million or 39 cents a share in the same period last year.

He said the rest of the year should be good for the company.

Sales and other income were $458.5 million compared to $369.3 million, and the return on capital employed was 7.9 per cent as opposed to 4.9 per cent. The figures are unaudited.

INDIANS BLOCK CPR LINE

CRANBROOK (CP) — Residents of the St. Mary's Indian reserve erected a wooden barrier Thursday morning across a local CP Rail line which cuts though their land near this southeastern British Columbia city.

Band administrator Lloyd Lezard said the band is protesting CP Rail's refusal to contain the progressive erosion caused by a faulty dike along the rail line.

About four trains a day normally use the tracks. Only one approached the barrier Thursday, and it backed up rather than try and crash the blockade.

The train stopped well before the barrier, and backed up after a friendly conversation between reserve residents and the those on the train, including M.A. Lypka, superintendent of CPR's Kootenay division.

Lypka said the railway would not try and run any trains through the blockade. "We want to settle this in a peaceful way with no demonstration," he said.

Lezard said he was told that a CP Rail lawyer from Vancouver was called to the company's head office in Montreal to discuss the matter.

The rail line was relocated about 10 years ago but the dike adjacent to it failed to halt continual erosion which has claimed about 80 or 90 acres, Lezard said. He said CP Rail should be held responsible for the damage.

Canada Props Dollar

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced arrangements Thursday night for massive foreign borrowings in West Germany and the United States as a further defence against the decline of the Canadian dollar in currency-exchange markets.

The third major borrowing in less than two months includes 1:5 billion West German marks — equal to about $725 million U.S. — and an unspecified large standby credit being negotiated with U.S. and other foreign banks.

Market authorities estimate the U.S. standby credit will be up to $1 billion U.S. This would raise the total of foreign loans and standby credits arranged in recent weeks to $4.97 billion U.S.

The last direct borrowing from Europe was a loan of $268 million in 1968 from West Germany, Italy and the United States.

Sinclair Stevens, Progressive Conservative finance spokesman in the Commons, said the repeated borrowings demonstrate "the depths of the problem" in Canada's slack economy as reflected in the declining foreign-currency reserves and slumping dollar. He predicted further loans from Switzerland and Japan.

Such borrowings, with heavy commitments in debt, interest and exchange payments abroad, mean Canada "loses more and more control over its economy," he said in an interview outside the Commons.

Hockey Fights Must End: AG

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said today the beating of a B.C. Junior League hockey player in Nanaimo Sunday was a disgusting display and warned if the league can't clean up its act, then governments will have to take action.

Gardom said he would be reluctant to step in because the responsibility lies with the league and team owners.

But he said hockey has sunk to a deplorable state when it gets to the point where Canada's national sport has to be policed through the justice system.

The league should change its rules so fighters are immediately ejected from the ice for the rest of the game. Fines should also be stiffer, he said.

During the Junior hockey playoff game between the Nanaimo Clippers and the Penticton Vees, Penticton player Brent Bourne became involved in an off-ice brawl.

Half a dozen Nanaimo players dragged him down the corridor near their dressing room and repeatedly beat him.

Gardom warned if coaches are encouraging their youngsters to play violent hockey they had better stop.

League president Ernie McLean said he told the team owners when he took over the job two years ago that attendance at the games was not good and warned them to change their style of play.

McLean said he didn't suggest a more aggressive brand of hockey.

Engineer Guilty

MONTREAL (CP) — A 56-year-old engineer was found guilty today of two charges laid in March, 1976, under the Official Secrets Act.

Alexander Peter Treu of Montreal was allowed to remain free pending pre-sentence recommendations by the Crown and defence May 4.

Sessions Court Judge Luc Trudel pronounced the guilty verdict but did not read the judgment, saying its contents referred to evidence heard at the closed-door trial and were not privileged.

Treu, designer of a ground-to-air surveillance and communications system for NATO, was charged with possession or control of documents or information he unlawfully retained in 1974.

MAIL BAGS TRACED HIS ROUTE

TORONTO (CP) — A driver of a mail truck drove 80 kilometres Wednesday before he realized bags of mail had been falling from the truck along the route.

Eight Canada Post bags of first- and second-class mail bounced out on the road before the driver of the truck, working under contract, noticed.

Post office investigators and provincial police traced the driver's route Thursday and picked up the spilled bags and loose mail.

3-Car Crash Kills Man, Driver Faces Charge

A 70-year-old West Vancouver man today was charged with criminal negligence and impaired driving in connection with a three-car collision Thursday night that killed one man and sent three others to hospital.

The crash occurred on the Pat Bay Highway near Beacon.

Police identified the dead man as Lawrence Melvin Chambers, 62, of 9940 Third Street in Sidney.

Lynwood William Ehrle appeared in provincial court this morning and elected trial by judge and jury.

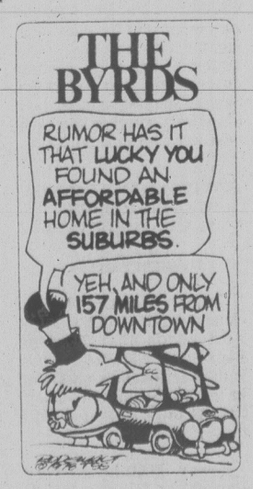
A preliminary hearing was set for Sept. 1 and he was released from custody on $1,000 bail.

Chambers was a passenger in a car driven by Herbert William Drew of 10171 West Saanich Road.

Drew, his wife, and Chambers' wife, Wilma, are reported in good condition in Saanich Peninsula Hospital.

The driver of the third car, Erin Jean Farquharson of 2268 James White Blvd. in Sidney escaped injury.

Sidney RCMP said the accident, which occurred at about 9.30 p.m. was caused when a southbound car got into the wrong lane near Beacon and collided with two northbound cars.



Food Bargains Ignored: B.C. Study

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

B.C. consumers annually spend about $2 billion on food, complain about high prices, but for the most part can't be bothered to seek out bargains.

These are some of the findings that have emerged from an intensive consumer survey of 10,000 households throughout the province.

The full report is in the hand of the legislature's select standing committee on agriculture.

From it will come some 100 mini-reports that will eventually make up a wide-ranging analysis of the agricultural situation in the province.

A second report will show at least two major supermarkets are under construction in Blaine, Wash., for the express purpose of drawing Canadian shoppers seeking cheaper U.S. foods.

Although Canadian boundary-crossing food shopping trips have declined in recent months with the falling Canadian dollar, investors in the supermarkets are counting on two factors to reverse the trend.

First, they predict the Canadian dollar will recover over the long haul, but more important, Washington state plans to remove its sales tax on food this summer.

The consumer survey has also found that while consumers are angry about food prices — especially eggs, milk and meat — they place the blame firmly on the shoulders of the middle-man, not the farmer.

But high prices or not, convenience is more important than bargains when it comes to food shopping.

Parking space and nearness of the outlet play a greater role in the choice of food market than prices, and advertising doesn't appear to have much effect in overriding the convenience factor.

B.C. consumers spend about 14 cents of their income dollar on groceries and another four cents on restaurant food.

The income percentage spent on food has remained consistent over the past five or six years.

Other data being studied by the agriculture committee show that 50 per cent of the meat consumed in the U.S. is in the form of hamburger.

In B.C. it's about 30 per cent but rising.

The chairman of the agriculture committee, Len Bawtree (Socred—Shuswap) said the provincial hamburger consumption percentage will eventually equal that of the U.S.

Tory Candidate Takes No Chances

TORONTO (CP) — A Progressive Conservative candidate for the next federal election said Thursday he has hired a security specialist because he is concerned by reports raised in Parliament this week of RCMP surveillance of political candidates.

Bob Jarvis, candidate for the Toronto riding of Willowdale, said he has engaged the services of a former air force security specialist to give his campaign workers tips on security for the next federal election.

Jarvis, a lawyer, said he wants to make sure his campaign headquarters and the homes of campaign workers are not subject to illegal wiretaps and break-ins and wants to prevent other invasions of privacy, including destruction of lawn signs and literature.

"I don't believe I am being over-cautious—merely prudent," Jarvis said.

In Ottawa, the prime minister said the RCMP security service checks up on people running for political office.

"Societies would be foolish if, in the name of civil liberties, they destroyed the powers of police to protect them," Trudeau said at his weekly news conference.

Trudeau said when people run for political office, the security service checks its files to see if there is a reason to keep them under surveillance.

Generally, "there is no surveillance of candidates," he said.

Latest available figures on gold and foreign-currency reserves show a decline of almost $2 billion U.S. in a year — $1.4 billion in the first three months of this year — to about $3.2 billion at the end of March, not counting last month's borrowings.

The exchange value of the Canadian dollar in New York was 88.27 cents U.S. this morning. It fell below 87 cents U.S. earlier this month. It was worth $1.03 U.S. 17 months ago.

The announcement said the government has arranged for a private borrowing of 1.5 billion marks through the Deutsche Bank, a major West German commercial bank.

The borrowing includes 600 million marks worth of five-year notes at a yield cost of 4.86 per cent annually. The notes were placed through an international group of banks and investment dealers.

Also in the deal are 500 million marks worth of six-year notes at a cost of 5.2 per cent a year and a further four-year loan of $400 million marks at 5.35 per cent annually.

Finance Minister Jean Chretien also announced that the government "is negotiating a large U.S. dollar revolving standby credit facility with a group of American and other foreign banks."

Cost of this standby credit will be based on U.S. prime lending rates, Chretien said.

ROWING JUDGE TAKES LEAVE

A Vancouver judge who raised the ire of women with his remarks that females don't get brains before they are 30 will take a leave of absence to work part-time for the health ministry.

Les Bewley, a veteran of 18 years on the provincial court bench, was criticized by the Law Society for his remarks during a trial late last year but no further action was taken.

Women's rights groups have called for his removal from the bench.

A health ministry press release says Bewley will act as a legal consultant to the B.C. Alcohol and Drug Commission on a part-time basis because he has other research he would like to undertake during the leave.

The release does not say how long his leave from the bench will be.

Birth Control Ads

MADRID (AP) — The lower house of the Spanish parliament has passed legislation to allow the advertising of contraceptives in this predominantly Roman Catholic country. Officials said the measure is expected to pass in the Senate also. Under current law, violators of the advertising ban can be jailed for up to six months.

the U.S. are largely responsible for the high hamburger consumption, he said.

Bawtree also hinted there will be other interesting surprises when full details of the reports are made public.

He pointed out that less than two per cent of food shopping is done across the U.S. border, and even with a more favorable exchange rate on the dollar, the bargains are not all that great when gasoline and other costs are included.

Many families, however, combine a family outing with a shopping trip for the week's groceries.

Bawtree said the Americans are candid about the construction of the border supermarkets and freely admit they are designed with Canadian customers in mind.

The exhaustive study will eventually determine the full extent of the province's arable land, the best locations for growing certain crops and who really makes money from agriculture — the farmer, shipper or supermarket, and how much each makes.

Dozens of representatives from all aspects of the industry have been called before the committee and information has been collected that has never before been available.

At least 12 other men were previously listed as dead, and five were unaccounted for.

Six of the 12 rescued miners crawled out themselves. The other six were carried out, suffering from broken bones and other injuries.

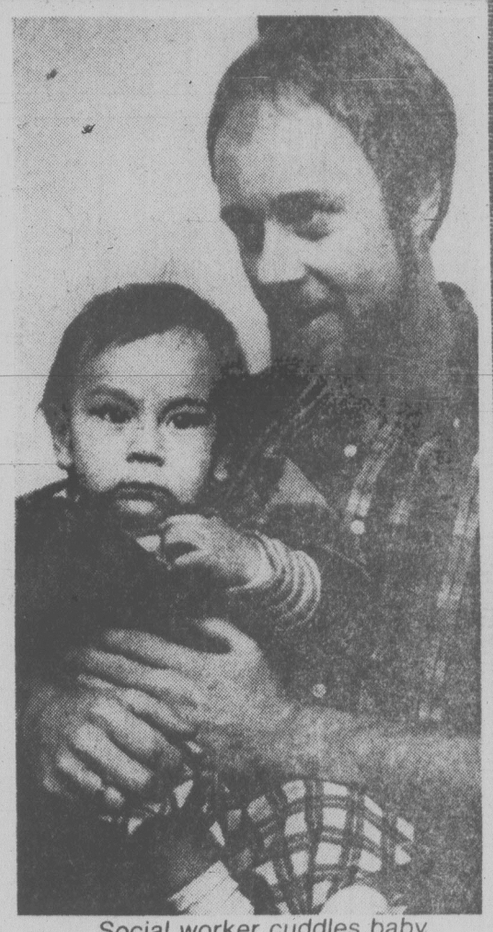
Mother Must Prove Herself



Social worker cuddles baby

VANCOUVER (CP) — A mother who left her baby in the care of a stranger in a downtown hotel for six days, returned to claim him Thursday but left the human resources ministry offices without her child.

The ministry said the mother must now prove that she is capable of looking after her little boy.

"In cases like this we don't just hand the baby over," a ministry spokesman said.

One week ago, the mother asked an elderly man in a skid road hotel to keep an eye on her baby for a few minutes. She didn't return, and police, called in the early hours of Saturday morning, turned the baby over to social workers who placed him in a temporary foster home.

All leads to the baby's identity or the mother's whereabouts were unsuccessful — until Thursday, when the mother showed up.

Controller's Sentence Reduced

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — The Supreme Court of Croatia has cut in half the prison term imposed on Gradimir Tasic, the Zagreb air traffic controller convicted of negligence in a 1976 airplane collision that killed 176 persons.

The court, in reducing the sentence Thursday to 3½ from seven years, said the "greatest responsibility lay with the federal management for civilian air traffic."

Sharp Heads Pipeline Plan

OTTAWA (CP) — Mitchell Sharp, a former Liberal cabinet minister, will resign from the Commons Tuesday to become commissioner of the northern pipeline agency, Prime Minister Trudeau said Thursday.

Sharp, who earlier announced he would not seek re-election as an MP, will head the government group that will oversee construction of a $10 billion pipeline from Alaska.

Trudeau also announced that Harold Millican, a former top aide to Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed and now executive director of the Canadian Petroleum Association, will be the administrator for the agency.

There was no mention in the prime minister's statement of what happens to Basil Robinson, a former undersecretary of state for external affairs who has been pipeline commissioner since April of last year.

Legislation authorizing the government to set up the special pipeline agency passed through Parliament earlier this month. It will oversee all aspects of final planning and construction of the line to move Alaskan natural gas across Canada to markets in the United States.

Sharp, 66, spent 15 years as a federal civil servant, rising to become deputy minister of trade in the 1950s. He left after the Progressive Conservatives came to power in 1957 for an executive spot in Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Co.

He won a seat in the Commons in 1963 and was appointed trade minister in the Liberal cabinet. He later served as minister of finance.

Pollution Warning

TOFINO (CP) — Water samples taken from the water supply here reveal a total coliform count that exceeds both provincial and national drinking water standards, Norm Clarkson, local health inspector said Thursday.

"From the samples we took, 13 of the total of 45 were positive," Clarkson said.

"It doesn't mean that the village's water supply is grossly polluted but it is a warning sign that something should be done about it."

The samples were taken earlier this month following a controversy over possible water chlorination for the village of 600 persons.

The village considered testing after water samples taken last summer by the federal department of fisheries revealed high coliform and fecal coliform counts.

Clarkson said, however, that his samples showed no sign of fecal coliform.

Mayor Penny Barr said the village will discuss the problem at a public meeting Monday.

"It's been proven now that we have a problem and we have to do something," she said.

COMMONS DEBATES: 'SICK, RUDE, BAD'

EDMONTON (CP) — A city cable television company recently carried out a survey to find out what people thought of televised House of Commons debates.

Sixty per cent of the subscribers had watched the show. Some described the proceedings as "sick, sick, sick" while others were critical of the "rudeness", "impoliteness," and "bad manners" displayed by their elected representatives.

There were positive comments. One Edmonton viewer said the televising of Commons debates was an excellent service. Another said it was the most educational program for all ages while one other viewer called it the best program on television.

One viewer said: "At our house we call it comedy hour."

A Double Standard

The nonsense that is being spouted by the B.C. School Trustees Association in the latest row about marijuana-smoking teachers can do little to improve the credibility of the trustees with students, teachers or the public at large.

Trustees want to ensure that they can fire for "misconduct" any teachers known to be smokers of marijuana, whether or not those teachers have been formally convicted in a court of law. A perfectly reasonable argument can be made for this viewpoint: support for decriminalization of the weed may be growing, but it is still against the law to smoke marijuana, and society might want to insist that teachers abide by the law or lose their jobs.

If the trustees choose to adopt that argument, that would be quite fair enough. But if then they should be required to follow it through with some sort of consistency: all teachers caught in a criminal offence should be fired.

And this is just what the BCSTA does not seem to be prepared to do. Instead, its president, Cliff Adkins, made a desperate attempt earlier this week to try to explain why teachers who get caught smoking marijuana should be fired, whether or not they are formally convicted, but teachers who get caught driving while impaired should not be fired, even if they are formally convicted.

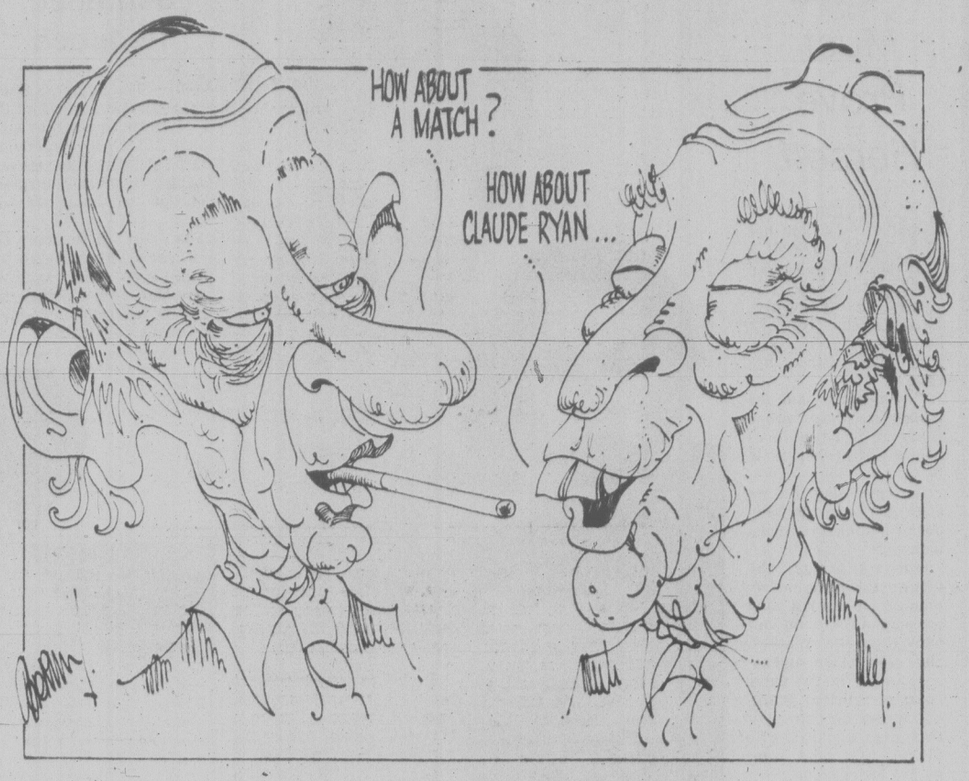
"Unless the teacher comes to class drunk," said Mr. Adkins, "impaired driving charges will have no effect on his students. Smoking or selling marijuana is a different situation. Students get to know about these things and might pick up the habit."

The absurdities in this argument are so numerous that they almost defy answering. If the impaired driving charge will have no effect on students unless a teacher comes to class drunk, why will a marijuana charge have an effect unless the teacher comes to class stoned, might we ask?

Why will students get to know about a marijuana possession charge more easily than they will get to know about an impaired driving charge? Why will the knowledge that a teacher smokes pot encourage students to try it themselves but the knowledge that a teacher drinks to excess and then drives have no effect on them?

It is possible to argue that impaired driving is a more serious criminal offence than possession of marijuana. The courts certainly treat it that way, fining the average impaired driver $400 or $500, the average marijuana smoker $75 or $100. And it is the rare pot-puffer who is jeopardizing his own life and those of other innocent victims, something the impaired driver is doing every time he takes to the highway.

If the school trustees want to fire teachers for illegal behavior, they should treat all illegal behavior equally, not establish a double standard on the basis of their own whims.



The Coup in Afghanistan

This week's coup in far-off Afghanistan, a landlocked mountainous nation about the size of Texas, undoubtedly has her powerful and influential neighbors watching warily. The fabled crossroads of Asia borders on the USSR, China, oil-rich Iran and Pakistan. What happens in Afghanistan often has profound ramifications for the other four.

The man who was ousted and killed in the coup, Mohammad Daoud, ironically came to power himself in a coup d'etat in 1973. A former prime minister and a retired general, he overthrew his brother-in-law, King Mohammed Zahir Shah, and declared Afghanistan a republic. All royal titles were abolished. The 1973 coup also put an end to a decade of experimentation with democracy in the undeveloped, essentially agricultural nation.

The old king's 1964 constitution was suspended and the Afghan shura, or parliament was abolished. The brief independence of the country's judicial system also ended, as Daoud brought the courts under the executive branch of government.

However, the new regime does not seem a ready convert to parliamentary democracy. Daoud's "republic" has been replaced by a military "revolutionary council" headed by Gen. Dagarwal Khadir.

The fighting which toppled the old regime seems to have been precipitated by an announcement on state radio that seven communist leaders had been arrested. Last week one of the nations most prominent communists was shot to death, and on April 19 a crowd of 15,000 bore his body past the American embassy, denouncing the CIA for its alleged involvement.

Daoud had been criticized for his attempts to establish a one-party state and his methods of instituting land reforms in the primarily agricultural country.

The world will watch closely in the ensuing months developments in this strategic part of the globe.

RICHARD GWYN

Insecure, Fed-up and Afraid

OTTAWA — "People vote," Liberal pollster Martin Goldfarb says, "for their dreams and their fears."

This time, it seems, Canadians are going to be pushed to the polls by their frustrations and their nightmares.

Self-doubting, questioning, confused, angry, impatient, unpredictable even to themselves, is how Canadians, as often as not without knowing it, describe themselves to pollsters.

Disconnected, in a word.

Seldom, it seems, have Canadians been less certain about what it is that they want and, therefore, less certain about which political party they want to give it to them.

Polling Prophets

This mood of malaise doesn't stretch from sea to sea. Albertans are jaunty. Quebecers, despite all their political and economic imponderables, reveal themselves in surveys as markedly more self-confident than most English-speaking Canadians.

Recently, both the Liberals and the Conservatives completed extensive cross-country sstudies by Goldfarb and by Bob Teeter of Canadian Opinion Research.

Before elections, pollsters play the same role as did Biblical prophets on the eve of a battle. Even among party insiders, few are allowed to read the computerized entrails of public opinion. Among the handful who have, here are the comments of four.:

□ A Conservative: "Canadians are deeply insecure. They know the news is bad. They don't, really, expect it to get better. Yet they are fed up with bad news, from politicians and the media, and want to hear good news even if they don't really believe it."

□ Another Conservative: "About a year ago, according to our polls, fear of instability had become an overriding concern. Stability, that is, in a personal, self-interested sense of being able to lead a normal life without abrupt economic or social change. Today, concern about instability has reached a point of acute anxiety."

□ A Liberal: "For the first time, a significant number of Canadians say they no longer believe life will be better for their children. If that belief becomes a conviction, all kinds of distortions can happen: in the past, people have always sublimated their own interests for those of their children."

□ Another Liberal: "How do we read the public's mood? It's schizophrenic."

Canadians, points out one political insider, are putting their money where their schizophrenic heads are. At one and the same time, Canadians are both saving more than ever before, (proportionately, twice as much as in the mid-1960s) and yet are conspicuously spending as never before, on "high-ticket" imports and, despite our foundering dollar, on holidays abroad.

Conventional, political explanations for this confusion are easy to find. Except in Quebec, probably a majority of Canadians are in a mood to heave Prime Minister Trudeau out of office. Only a minority of the same people are in a mood, yet, to heave Conservative leader Joe Clark into office.

To compound the political confusion, many of the same Canadians who are alienated from Trudeau for economic reasons still are sticking by him for the sake of national unity. In Toronto, for example, the Liberals have discovered that their support, while large, is "soft." To stiffen their national unity vote, the Liberals now plan, despite the protests of some party insiders, to hustle out the government's long-promised constitutional proposals in mid-campaign.

Political tactics can manipulate, but they cannot assuage, the public's malaise. Doubts about Trudeau uncompensated for by confidence in Clark is one thing. Disbelief in government itself is quite another.

Canadians, on the evidence still believe that governments can "do something" about unemployment. When faced by pollsters' "solvability" questions, though, Canadians, apparently, no longer believe that any government can do anything about inflation. The point here, as any reading of history will confirm, is that it is less often unemployment (the presence of today's, job-hungry students as an example) than inflation which provokes social instability.

Amid instability, people always reach out for the familiar. Public support for the RCMP is one illustration of this attitude. Another, provided it is interpreted as an expression of a desire to return to the discipline of "old values," is today's renewed demand for a return of capital punishment.

Uncertainty, Discretion

The call for the noose illustrates, as persuasively, another traditional response to instability. "The public is searching for scapegoats," reports a Liberal insider. "Unemployment insurance, postal workers and teachers are the leading candidates."

An unattractive mood. And an unpredictable one. The same survey which dismayed the Liberals by uncovering a large number of Canadians who now tag Trudeau as "weak" and "indecisive," also delighted the Liberals by recording an even larger number who label Trudeau a "world statesman" and who take a deep, personal, pride in his title.

Amid uncertainty, discretion is the better part of punditry. The only worthwhile political conclusions are the conventional ones. Pay little heed to today's eleven percentage point gap (according to Gallup) between Liberals and Conservatives. Pay even less heed to anyone who dares you to bet your income tax rebate on any result you care to imagine.

GERALD GODIN

How Quebec Sees Tax Cut

Journalist Gerald Godin is the Parti Quebecois member of the Quebec legislature for Mercier.

We saw recently a very good example of what Quebecers do not like about federalism "a la Canadienne."

First, Ottawa makes a proposal to the provinces: a contribution to partially decrease the sales tax. This is a vital part of provincial sovereignty, which is enshrined in the constitution. For most provinces, this sovereignty is not that important. They do not give a damn about the constitution, as long as they get the money from the federal government. Let's not forget that all that money is paid by all Canadians, among them Quebecers who contribute something like $12 billion to federal coffers.

Ottawa has so much money left it does not know what to do with it, so it interferes in provincial jurisdiction. It seems to us if Ottawa has so much money that it has to spend it in provincial jurisdictions, the logical course would be to give back the tax base itself to the provinces.

What we have here is hypertrophy of tax base and distrophy of jurisdictions in Ottawa and the reverse situation in the provinces.

Not Federalism

Ottawa's proposal — an across-the-board tax reduction — goes exactly along the lines of what Canadian federalism has been for the past decades and decades: building the Canadian economy as a pyramid with the top in Ontario. To put it grossly, the economic activity is in Ontario and the equalization payments are for the other provinces.

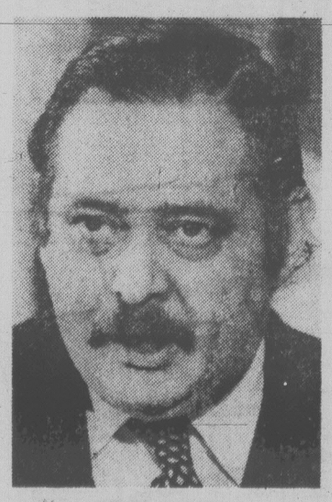
True federalism, I think, could have been achieved by sprinkling the economic development all over the country, so as to prevent what is called "regional alienation" wherever you go in this country, whether it is in Halifax, Winnipeg, Moncton, Saskatoon, you name it.

The way it was done, willingly or not, was the opposite. The best example is the auto assembly lines, which are massively located in Ontario and which serve the whole Canadian market. This is the Canadian economic pyramid.

Unless something is changed in that situation, regional alienation will not disappear. And maybe the present and future leaders of Canada should put that in their pipes and smoke it, if they really want to save Canada, at least English Canada.

The Chretien proposal, with its across-the-board string attached to it, will, in effect, consolidate the pyramid. The counter-proposal of Quebec Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau was an effort to break the pyramid and put the money where unemployment was highest. In fact, it was taking into account "regional disparities," as they say in Ottawa, and what we call, in Quebec, the underdevelopment of Quebec. The proposals of Jean Chretien themselves took into account some of the disparities in offering the Atlantic provinces a sort of special status, by allowing them a contribution for a greater tax decrease.

In the same perspective, the Quebec government came out with an approach even more sophisticated than Ottawa's. It proposed to use the federal money (collected in Quebec, mind you) in a manner better suited for the Quebec problems and the soft spots of its economy, its labor-intensive sectors and sectors where a dollar's worth of goods means more jobs than in any other.



JACQUES PARIZEAU
. . . who knows best?

And the Parizeau counter-proposal also guaranteed Quebec its sovereignty on its own tax base. In other words, Quebec said to Ottawa: you have got some money you want to give us back. Okay, we take it as a package and we use it, in the tax field, as you insist we do, but we are going to use it to affect the sectors of our choice. Is that not what true federalism is all about?

But, very soon, instead of being seen like a better concoction produced by the work of good brains on both sides, it was presented as a new war and strife between the scorpions in the bottle.

So, the Canadian economic pyramid will remain untouched. Unemployment will still be higher in Quebec than in Ontario, instead of going in the direction of being equalized, which is the goal of the Quebec government.

And what is even more important: Quebec will be left with recouping less money than it should have, since the Parizeau counter-proposals will apply notwithstanding what Ottawa does. The loss will be somewhere around $140 millions.

Ottawa prefers to keep in its coffers money earmarked for Quebec, rather than see Quebec spending it to ease unemployment in the sectors of its choice.

This is where we are. I think it can be called a quagmire. But, tell me, on what side do you think lies the greater percentage of rationality? In Ottawa or in Quebec?

In the end, the people, the electorate, will be the judge. Neither I nor anyone else can presume what the electorate will do, either in the next federal election or the next provincial election.

Don't Discount It

Sometime between these two events, the people of Quebec will decide, all of them, in only one ballot box and on identical ballots. They will have the opportunity to decide if they agree to entrust to the only government on earth belonging completely to Quebecers control over the complete tax base and the essential powers a state needs to develop and to solve its many problems.

This is the rationale behind all the sovereignty-association thinking since its very inception more than a decade ago.

The other night, in a school in the West Island, a charming lady came to me and told me: "Could you tell Mr. Levesque that he is wrong in saying that he does not count much on the support of the English community, since they never did or will vote for the PQ, or 'yes' at the referendum. Tell him that it is not that certain and we are not to be discounted that easily, as eventual allies."

What is her reaction, as of today, to the Ottawa stance?

Personally, I do not discount Anglo-Quebecers one second, either for "yes" votes in the referendum, or for PQ votes in the next Quebec elections.

And for all these reasons, I think no one should, so early in the game, discount a PQ victory either in the referendum or in the next provincial elections. Unless one delves in wishful thinking and takes its dreams for reality.

On Our Own Heads

All citizens must be asking themselves which of our political parties can overcome the two big problems which have beset the nation over the past few years — the unemployment situation and our inflationary problems.

Is there anyone sufficiently naive today who seriously thinks that any of our national parties can solve these problems, which are quite clearly regulated by forces outside a government's capability of action? Surely it is the multinational corporations who call the tune from one side and the unions from the other. For some considerable time the function of national governments has become far more parochial and quite incapable of dealing with the larger issues that affect us all.

The Trudeau government has been in power for about nine years now, and its economic effort has been a dismal failure, rapidly going from bad to worse, so that our currency is now at its lowest ebb ever and the unemployment situation as bad as the 1930s, which most of my generation remember with considerable venom.

What of the Conservatives under Joe Clark? The only suggestion noted to date to improve the employment situation is a proposal to boost the private sector, in other words, the small businessman, by concessions of various kinds.

As far as the other political parties are concerned, NDP, Social Credit and the like, these are merely minnows swimming in waters outside their depth or numerical status and can be written off.

When one considers unemployment from all its angles, it is no new phenomenon in this country. It has always run at a higher rate than in the U.K. for example, and, as the writer remembers from personal experience, it was difficult to get a job in the early 1920s, before the Depression. Apart from the industrious years after the Second World War the level of unemployment has always remained high.

Draconian methods are necessary, such as lowering the retirement age, making moonlighting a punishable offence and ensuring that both husband and wife are not a part of the work force. We have indeed created a Frankenstein monster which may yet destroy our social system and lead to utter chaos and final anarchy.

As far as inflation is concerned, we have ourselves partly to blame. The standard of living has been allowed by governments who are far more interested in vote-catching than the national welfare, wages have risen far in excess of production. The credit card system is one of the major curses of our times, destroying thrift.

If more Canadians saved their money and invested in Canadian enterprises our financial position would improve in a few years, with a higher percentage of ownership in our own hands, the bulk of our profits would not be flowing out of the country, mostly to the U.S., as is now the case. We have become much too self-indulgent to take such a course of action. Keeping up with the Jones' and the good things of life are much more important for our inflated egos. Be it on our own heads then. — A. G. Builder, 3-1030 Bay Street.

Yes for Building

It is to be hoped that the people of Esquimalt will support council's referendum on April 29 to build the public safety building.

I urge them to go and see for themselves the present inadequate and scattered facilities now being used by our police and fire departments. They are shocking.

The ambulance service to be stationed at the public safety building will undoubtedly save many lives as time goes by. It is an urgent need.

It is a proven fact that our combined police and fire departments coupled with the dockyard fire department save us thousands of dollars annually.

The Capital Regional Board would dearly love to force amalgamation of police and fire services for the Greater Victoria area upon us. What this would do would be to increase our costs a hundredfold. It would mean the loss of co-operation from the dockyard fire department and give less police protection in our municipality.

A yes vote for the public safety building will keep the amalgamationists away from Esquimalt municipality. — George R. Banfield, 847 Carrie Street.

Israel's 19th Century Leader

By DAN GILLON
Manchester Guardian

Because he's unable to compromise, Manachem Begin is doomed to defeat

Just five months ago Menachem Begin was at the peak of his political power and personal popularity. In May, 1977, after 29 years in the political wilderness, he had been elected prime minister. Six months later he became the first Israeli leader to meet an Arab head of state on Israeli soil. Today Begin is fighting for his political life, increasingly beleaguered at home and under intense pressure from the United States to alter his negotiation strategy in the talks with Egypt.

Those who know him well are not surprised at Begin's current predicament. For him to have followed any course other than the one he did would have required a massive change in attitude and belief. But Begin is almost entirely incapable of such change, no matter what the challenge. He is a deeply conservative man with an absurd sense of propriety and honor; a Polish gentleman of the 19th century who finds it impossible to adapt in either style or substance to the world of today.

He lives in a world of his imagination. He has forged his own reality and surrounds himself only with those who can share his peculiar illusions. Often he is in a trance, especially when engaged in oratory and immediately after. But when it comes to today's political realities the trance is permanent — for instance his belief, still apparently not shed, that he could convince President Carter of a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict based on the convenant between God and Abraham. Many generations of Jews believed in the validity of that covenant and many still do, but Begin is the first to make of it a political platform or a basis for diplomatic negotiation.

Aside from an almost mystical belief in his own destiny to lead the Jewish people, Begin sees himself as the heir to the movement by Zeev Jabotinsky. Jabotinsky, who died in 1940, was the founder of Revisionist Zionism and of the new Zionist organization which vied for political power with Labour Zionism in pre-state days. No man, with the exception perhaps of Theodore Herzl, was more adored by his disciples, and the passion with which Jabotinsky's enemies hated him was unique. His followers rallied to him as the Garibaldi of the Jewish revolution; his foes reviled him as its would-be Mussolini.

Ironically, apart from the art of oratory which Begin learned well from his mentor, there is little real resemblance between the two men. Jabotinky, like Herzl, was an emancipated Jew. He was a statesman in the grandest sense — a master tactician and diplomat. He was an elegant man with a natural charm and civility. Begin on the other hand is a deeply religious Jew: some would say that he is the first really Jewish prime minister that Israel has had. He is impulsive, with little sense for the finesse of diplomacy and an impatience with the requirements of statesmanship.

Begin has transferred the notion of Jewish persecution from the ghettos of Europe to the Middle East, and in the process has entirely ignored the fact that today's Jewish struggle involves a clash between two national movements. He sees the world entirely through the prism of Jewish history and believes that only Jews have rights.

In the struggle for independence, Begin was the commander in chief of the Irgun, an underground terrorist organization which played a major role in forcing the British government to abandon the Palestine mandate and hand the issue over to the UN. In 1948 the Irgun was disbanded and Begin founded Herut (Freedom), the political party which is now the largest single faction in the coalition of right-wing parties known as Likud.

In a sense Begin never succeeded in making the transition from the Underground to Parliament. In 1948 Ben Gurion, Israel's first prime minister, excluded Herut along with the Communists from any form of participation in the government of the new state, regarding both as a danger to the survival of Israeli democracy. Though this attitude wounded him deeply, Begin was nonetheles happy in his opposition role. He bore none of the responsibility of government; he could afford to be a fanatic dedicated to mystical precepts.

At no time did he try to create around him a group which could be taken seriously as a potential cabinet under his premiership, surrounding himself instead with his comrades-in-arms from the old Irgun days. The Meshpaha Lohemet (the Fighting Family) as the group became known, were men who took orders from Begin without question and who regarded his judgment as infallible. Many of them remain his closest advisers and occupy prominent positions in his administration.

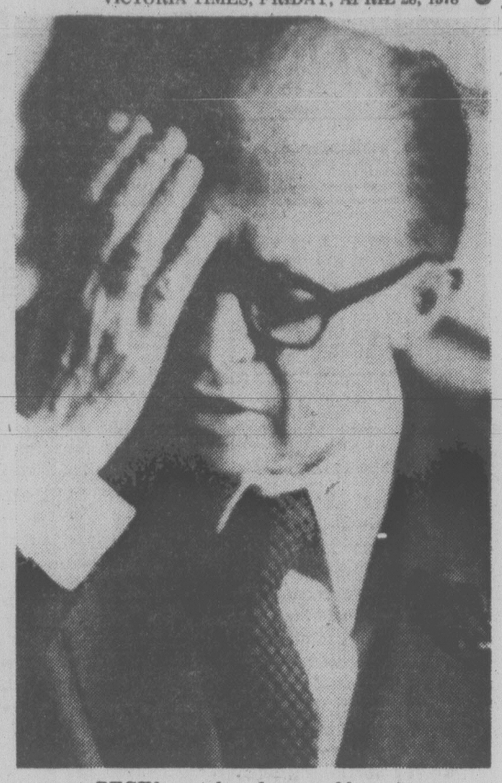
Once in power Begin quickly realized the need to calm widespread fears both in Israel and abroad about the implications of a Likud government. There were fears that it meant inevitable war; that Begin would bring about a confrontation with the U.S.; that American Jewish support for Israel's policies would be eroded and that domestically Likud's fierce anti-socialism and its commitment to dismantle the economic and social instrument of Labour Zionism would lead to bitter and possibly violent internal unrest. Begin knew that his first priority must be to prove that all of these fears were entirely without foundation. He succeeded brilliantly.

Within weeks of taking office a new mood swept the country. The muddle of Labour rule, it was felt, was at long last gone. An honest and decisive government had taken over and there was once again a sense of vision and purpose. Begin went to great lengths to establish an image of moderation. There would be confrontation neither at home nor abroad.

President Sadat's historic decision to come to Jerusalem and open direct negotiations with Israel appeared to confirm his belief that Begin was the right man in the right place at the right time. The initiative was Sadat's but the dramatic scenario of the Jerusalem meeting was largely the product of Begin's personality and manner of governing. During 30 years of Labour rule there seemed to be no alternative to unending war with the Arab world. In less than six months under Begin Sadat was in Jerusalem and real peace was finally within Israel's grasp.

Now all of that has evaporated. The plan and program that gave rise to such high hopes less than a year ago are today under severe attack at home and abroad. There are demands for the government's resignation. Begin's personal popularity has fallen from a mere 80 per cent approval rating earlier this year to below 60 per cent. In recent days there have been mass popular demonstrations calling for a reappraisal of Israeli policy.

Relations with the United States have never been at a lower ebb and American Jewry is split and finds it increasingly difficult to support Israel's policies and tactics. After a good beginning, the economy is now in worse shape than ever, with a 30 per cent inflation over the past three months alone. Industrial unrest is rampant and the government's competence in handling internal problems is being increasingly questioned. As the facade of moderation begins to crumble a growing number of Israelis feel that they have been cheated.



BEGIN . . . 'absurd sense of honor'

Begin's trouble really began with Sadat's journey to Jerusalem. That visit challenged what had been the central thesis of Israeli policy since the state was created, namely that at the heart of the conflict was the Arab world's persistence in denying Israel's very right to exist. Sadat thought to put an end to that issue. As head of the single most powerful state confronting Israel, he accepted the Jewish State's right to exist, welcomed it to the Middle East and offered peace and security arrangements.

At first there seemed to be a genuine willingness on the Israeli side to make concessions or at the very least to find out more about Sadat's condition for a settlement in a constructive spirit.

But this, it is now clear, was only done in the hope that in spite of his insistence on a comprehensive scheme Sadat's real aim was a separate Egyptian-Israeli deal that would initially exclude all other issues and the Palestinians' problem in particular. Sadat's willingness to convene the Cairo and Ismailia conferences in December strengthened Begin's belief in the feasibility of a bilateral arrangement. Since the Israeli government was prepared to acknowledge Egyptian sovereignty over the entire Sinai Peninsula Begin felt there was nothing to prevent the achievement of a separate peace with Egypt.

But this was not Sadat's purpose. His mission was not intended to make life easier for the Israelis. His initiative was designed to break away from past procedural wrangles and time-wasting diplomacy and confront Israel directly with a clear choice. Either there would be real peace based on withdrawal from all the Occupied Territories and a recognition of the Palestinian right to self-determination or there would be no peace at all.

It is now apparent that the concessions demanded by Sadat are so much at odds with Begin's lifelong convictions that he cannot make them.

For Begin himself there seems practically no way out of the present dilemma other than resignation. It is crystal clear that he will never compromise on his prinicples. Begin can rightly claim that he went far beyond the limits of his own ideology when he offered Arabs in the West Bank and Gaza "limited autonomy." Those who now feel cheated have only themselves to blame for believing that a man with such deeply held convictions would prove a De Gaulle able to put aside nationalist ideology for the sake of his country's true peace.

President Sadat's major error was to believe that peace could be achieved literally overnight. Thirty years of enmity and distrust cannot be simply wished away. Rejecting the policies of the Begin government is a crucial first step and one which the people of Israel now seem ready to contemplate. Formulating a set of acceptable alternatives will take time.

The 'His' or 'Her' Problem

By TOM WICKER
New York Times

Serious people, sooner or later, must deal with serious problems. So let us put aside small questions about Panama Canal treaties, income tax reform, the inflation rate, whether Jimmy Carter is in for a four or eight-year stretch, and why the Soviets have more throw-weight than we have launch vehicles, or vice versa. It is past time to deal with the His or Her Problem.

This conundrum has particular applicability to those who earn their living at the typewriter, but this problem is fraught with significance for everyone who has to use the language in any way. If you occasionally send a memo to the boss, rise to address the PTA, appear on television talk shows, write a politician, or have a frank chat about sex and money with your kids, the His or Her Problem is yours. It haunts the age.

The crisis springs from the contemporary fact of life that one (an elitist usage that ducks the issue) can no longer decently refer to "man" or "men" or even the broader "mankind" when speaking of homo sapiens. It is, moreover, akin to shouting "Fire!" in a crowded theatre to write "him" instead of the all-inconclusive "him or her." Thus, to say something like "Man is a creature who can use his brain" instantly belies the words, since nothing is stupider than uttering such loaded phrases in these days of high-rise sex consciousness. Make it "Man or woman is a creature who can use his or her brain," or else.

The ponderous syntactical consequences led even Phyllis Whitney, a prolific author, to plead for permission (in the April 1977 issue of The Writer) "to use the pronoun 'him' instead of the awkward and self-conscious 'him or her' that is being nervously interposed these days . . . May we follow the more customary convention that 'she' is included in 'he'."

I shudder to think what response this heinous suggestion may have cooked. But it led Professor Robert Longwell of the University of Northern Colorado to devise a vocabulary — I think inadequate — to meet the problem. Writing in the Rocky Mountain News, Longwell proposed: For "he or she" write "hesh," pronounced with a long 'e'.

For the possessive "his or her," write "hizer."

For "him or her" write "hirm," which naturally leads also to "hirmself."

When referring to the human race, such as it is, use "mowan" instead of "man or woman," obviously with the plural "mowen".

Finally, to solve the virulent "chairperson" or "first baseperson" controversy, the Longwell proposal is for the new suffix "wan" with the plural "wen" — as in "a policewan" or "some underclasswen," this providing, as he says, "a word for all people."

Admitting the ingenuity of the Longwell system, on the whole it seems rather too evenhanded. One suspects that the chauvinists of either gender are not seeking semantic unisex so much as sexual hegemony.

Here is a somewhat simpler suggestion than Professor Longwell's; and it has the virtue of offering a little something to both sexes rather than all that dull even-handedness. Let each writer or speaker, on first coming upon the necessity for general reference to the race, use whatever awkward formulation may be necessary to include both camps; "his or her," "himself or herself," "gunperson." Just let it all hang out, the first time around.

After this solemn gesture of compromise, however, and on the tested principal of every mowan for hirmself, let each writer and speaker on all subsequent occasions proudly use hizer own sex to determine which words to use in reference to both sexes. Thus, after the first "his or her," there is no other, as each sex assumes its own nomenclature.

Those Ageless Idols

For many years I managed to be asleep nights when the Academy Awards were passed out on television. And so, not having seen this spectacle since Marie Dressler and Louise Fazenda were the toast of Hollywood, I was shocked a few weeks ago when, having been press-ganged by movie-magazine addicts and chained in front of a television tube, this extraordinary phenomenon revealed itself.

I do not refer to Vanessa Redgrave, who shocked everybody else by developing an eerie light around the eyes and then going completely off the scope. I have seen this sort of thing done much better by Richard Nixon, and Miss Redgrave's performance seemed small potatoes if you had seen Mr. Nixon go off the scope the day the Senate rejected his nomination of G. Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court.

What was truly disconcerting, what was devastating — well, how can I say it? There was a time when I was scarcely more than four feet tall and wore corduroy knickers and a Lucky Lindy aviator's cap with isinglass goggles and went to the movies on Saturday afternoon to destroy my teeth on Mary Jane bars (two for a penny) and to look at these people. Bob Hope, Kirk Douglas, Bette Davis, Barbara Stanwyck, Janet Gaynor, the whole glorious gang of them.

At that time I was a child and they were grown up. But then, of course, time passed, as time is supposed to do, and one day I walked in front of the mirror and was startled. My Lucky Lindy cap was gone and, what was worse, so was I. Instead of me staring back out of that mirror, there was somebody who looked like Wallace Beery. Or possibly Walter Brennan. I mean this character was old.

Not the way Douglass Dumbrille was old, with that patent-leather gloss and savoir-faire about headwaiters and horse-race fixes that made advanced age a blessing of sorts. But old the way Walter Brennan was old. A grizzled old coot who was pappy to the Clanton boys or the Dalton boys who were going to be outgunned by Henry Fonda before the Mary Janes got your last molar.

Do I make my point? I had aged. "And so what?" you will ask. It would be weird not to age if you had been around since Mary Jane bars were two for a penny. Which is precisely the point. These people on the Academy Award spectacle had not aged.

Oh, you could tell they had some years on them, but there was scarcely one of them who didn't look 10 years my junior. And I am not exactly a geezer yet. But these people should have been geezers if they had been using the same calendar everybody else uses. And yet they weren't.

I had always assumed that Jack Benny was joking about being eternally 39 years old, but maybe he wasn't. In Movieland they seem to be able to stop the clock at 39, or 43 at the outside, and if you are one of the people condemned to live in Humanland it is depressing. It is depressing to look at Bob Hope, who 40 years ago looked 30 years older than you, and notice that you now look 20 years older than he.

This was the 50th occasion of the Academy's presentations and near the end Mr. Hope said he looked forward to presiding over the ceremonies closing the next 50-year span. I think he really meant it. I think there's a good chance he will really do it.

Most of the evening, of course, we were looking at miracles of dentistry and wrinkle surgery and who knows what other preservationist arts available to the rich of the Los Angeles basin. Lady contemporaries of Lindbergh showed cheeks smooth as fresh apples. Men old enough to have voted for Coolidge flashed teeth as dazzling as airline stewardesses'. Lincoln is supposed to have said that after 40 every person is responsible for his own face, but these faces were the responsibility of whole committees on eternal youth.

Now and then an authentic life-hewn face did appear, and it was exhilarating. Fred Astaire came with his own wrinkles, and I wanted to applaud. William Holden came looking like a man who had made the usual excursions into life and been affected by them much the way most of us are. Which is to say, he looked interesting instead of preserved.

For performers, of course, physical preservation is a vital necessity and the successful ones can afford it. If my reaction to it seems unhappy, it is not for lack of sympathy with them. It is because it is very unpleasant to spend an evening in the presence of people who were grown-ups when you were a child, then pass a mirror and realize you are old enough to be their father.

Gulf Oil

Gulf Oil Corp. says it plans to reduce capital spending following a seven-per-cent decline in first-quarter profits.

Gulf's profits for the three months ended March 31, slipped to $155 million, or 79 cents a share, from $166 million, or 85 cents a share in the 1977 quarter. Sales rose to $4.88 billion from $4.85 billion a year earlier.

Gulf Chairman Jerry McAfee told the company's annual meeting that because of the fall in profits, capital spending will be reduced from the $2.5 billion planned in 1977 to reach a record $14.3 billion gross tons.

McAfee said: "We have no choice but to cut back our capital spending to a level that corresponds more closely to our cash flow." He declined to provide further details.

Outlook Poor For Shipping

LONDON (Reuter) — Economic recession has worsened the situation in the world's shipping and shipbuilding industries, making a return to normality by 1980 "only a possibility," Robert Huskisson, chairman of Lloyd's Register of Shipping, says in his annual report.

Huskisson said 1977 will be remembered by the two industries "as the year in which the current crisis really began to bite, the evidence of which has been the first unhappy flurry of bankruptcies in both sectors."

He added: "In my statement last year, I said that a return to a more stable situation by 1980 was probable. Since then, the situation has worsened by a degree, and I would now say that a return to normality by 1980 is only a possibility."

Huskisson said over-capacity in relation to current needs can only be described as frightening. The tanker scene remains disastrous with more than 350 ships idle, deliveries still being made and many billions of dollars outstanding on mortgages, he said.

He said more alarming is that the dry cargo market is suffering from over-tonnage. "This is as a result of the knock-on effect of owners getting out of contracts to build tankers by building bulk carriers instead, which in turn has pushed down rates in the dry cargo trades."

Huskisson said that despite the year of sluggishness, the world's fleet of ships as recorded by Lloyds increased by 6.5 million gross tons in 1977 to reach a record 114.3 million gross tons.

Texaco Cda.

Texaco Canada Ltd. announced net income for the first quarter of 1978 of $6,370,000 or 65 cents a share compared with $9,571,000 or 98 cents a share for the same quarter last year.

R. W. Sparks, president and chief executive officer, said costs continue to escalate without a corresponding increase in product prices.

Another factor in the lower earnings was higher borrowing costs to finance the new refinery at Nanticoke, Ont.

Cities Service

First quarter profits at Cities Service Company declined to $55.3 million, or $2 a share, on sales of $1.17 billion. In the 1977 period, it had a profit of $59.3 million or $2.16 a share, on sales of $1.1 billion.

Phillips Pete

Phillips' Petroleum Company first quarter 1978 profits climbed to $165 million or $1.07 a share, on sales of $1.7 billion. In the comparable 1977 period, it had a profit of $122 million or 79 cents a share, on sales of $1.6 billion.

Whether it was our loss of use coverage, our emergency road service, our choice of deductibles, or simply the fact that they want the personal service an independant agent can offer, a lot of people chose Autoshield.

So Royal Insurance is here to stay. And if you're in the market for car insurance, now or in the future, we'd like to invite you to call an Autoshield agent and make your choice.

The two-day event is at the University of Victoria Student Union Building.

Foxfire is an environmental magazine now in its 12th year of publication by a group of Georgia high school students.

Also on the agenda are workshops on batiking, bookbinding, copper enamelling and discussions on human sexuality, cloning and the status of alternative schools in B.C.

The annual conference is being arranged as part of the curriculum of the Victoria Girls Alternative Program.

Participants are expected from as far north as Granisle and as far east as Creston.

Students and one staff member from Foxfire will speak at the opening session and then conduct workshops.

The Foxfire project started in 1966 when traditional teaching methods failed to interest teen-age students in Rabun Gap Nacoochee School in Georgia.

Students there raised $450 to produce a magazine documenting the folklore, history, and lifestyles of the Appalachian people.

Additional conference information is available from conference co-ordinators Tammi Hetherington and Pam Cox at 382-7712.

Doman Picks Duke Point Site

DUNCAN — Doman Industries Ltd. has settled on the Duke Point industrial area of Nanaimo for its new sawmill.

Announcement of the site choice was made here Thursday at the annual meeting of shareholders.

The mill, to cost between $20 million and $30 million, is expected to be in production by late 1979 and will employ about 180 on a fulltime basis, President Herb Doman announced. Construction will start this year.

Doman said the mill will have a capacity of 150 million to 180 million board feet a year, utilizing large logs and sawing them into metric dimensions for export to Pacific Rim and European countries.

Still to be completed is purchase of 60 acres on which to locate the mill from the British Columbia Development Corporation, but BCDC officials Thursday expressed enthusiasm over the company's announced intention.

Peter Breikss, BCDC project director for Duke Point, said from Vancouver that the Doman announcement, coupled with last week's disclosure of mutlimillion dollar federal government funding for a shipping terminal, makes the Duke point project a reality.

Several factors were involved in the decision to locate at Duke Point, Doman said. One was a $20 million debenture floated in 1977 and another was the acquisition of three timber sale harvesting licences on the Mainland.

Doman said the assured log supply will mean an additional 400 jobs in the forests.

The new sawmill will be located next to the MacMillan Bloedell Harmac pulp and paper mill. Because of this, Doman said, it is important that his company reach an agreement with the International Woodworkers of America over a continuous-production work schedule. This is vital where woodrooms adjoin pulp mills in order to assure a chip supply.

Doman assured conservationists that the mill's design will not harm fishing in the Nanaimo River estuary.

NATIVE ON FISHERY BOARD

VANCOUVER (CP) — For the first time, Canada has appointed a native Indian to serve on an international fisheries commission, the federal fisheries department announced Thursday.

The department said federal Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc has appointed Alvin W. Dixon, 39, of White Rock, to a two-year term on the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission.

Japanese Inspectors Take Local Jobs - Union

VANCOUVER (CP) — The United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union (UFAWU) says Japanese technicians are doing work in the salmon and herring roe industry that can be handled by Canadians and the union is displeased with an immigration department investigation.

About 280 technicians employed by Japanese firms importing herring and salmon roe from West Coast companies are involved.

Jack McKinstrey, Pacific region immigration director, said Thursday that most of the investigation is complete and no evidence has been found of serious infractions of work permits issued to the Japanese.

Mike Darnell, UFAWU spokesman in Prince Rupert, said, however, that there have been violations on a regular basis but immigration "has stonewalled our efforts to get precise information and isn't talking to us."

Linda Long, bargaining agent for the Amalgamated Shoreworkers and Clerks Union at Prince Rupert, said she didn't know an investigation was in progress so she couldn't have provided information earlier.

She said, however, that she has several photographs of Japanese technicians working on the line.

She and Darnell said they are upset because in a time of high unemployment foreign technicians are doing jobs covered by the bargaining unit and because Canadians now are qualified to inspect and grade the roe but are not being employed in that capacity.

"If they're going to be over here then they should have their hands in their pockets," she said of the Japanese workers.

The West Coast herring roe fishery, which opened in 1971, now is worth $130 million dollars and Japan is the exclusive market.

As part of contracts with Canadian packing companies, the Japanese insist that they be allowed to provide their own quality control supervisors.

"At the time the herring roe fishery began, the Japanese had the only expertise to grade the product," said Darnell. "We could see the point that they should have some quality control.

"But now they are not only assessing production, they are grading, and assuming our jobs — filling the tanks, stacking the roe, making boxes.

"Through a slow and steady process, the Japanese are assuming hundreds of jobs in B.C. We find it unacceptable that labor is being allowed to come in behind capital."

McKinstrey said 476 work permits were issued for the technicians this year by the Canadian immigration office in Tokyo and it has been determined that 286 were used. About 230 technicians were engaged in the roe fisheries last year.

"Over the years they have been brought in strictly for quality control," he said, adding that "there seems to be less need now due to the expertise of Canadians."

McKinstrey and Don Wilson, fisheries department chief of inspection for the Pacific region, both said no precise standards have been established in Canada for grading herring roe and the importers demand that their own people provide quality control and, still are the recognized experts in the field.

"Their role is important in terms of the value of the trade being done," said Wilson. ". . . They are assuring continuity of that very important trade."

McKinstrey agreed with the union spokesmen that "part of the understanding was that they (the technicians) were training Canadians" but said he didn't know if any Canadians had been employed as a result.

Ms. Long said work performed on a regular basis by technicians at the Prince Rupert Fishermen's Co-operative Association plant was one reason behind a wildcat walkout by union members March 28.

She said a grievance had been filed March 22, a week after the herring roe fishery began, and that earlier the technicians had been brining the herring and removing baskets from conveyor belts.

Ms. Long said the provincial labor relations board ordered the workers back to their jobs March 29 and since then there has been a noticeable restriction in work by Japanese technicians although some violations still occur.

She said the company blamed the problem on a lack of guidelines from the federal government and the need to remain competitive. About 15 technicians and 450 union members are at the plant.

McKinstrey said companies were not told in advance of an inspection but Darnell said he knew of a case in which "a foreman warned one shop steward to get the Japanese nationals to quit working around the tanks because immigration people were coming in a few minutes."

Union Plotting Ruled Out

VANCOUVER — The Labor Relations Board ruled Thursday that Tony Puddicombe and Andrew Halper were not fired from jobs at a nursery owned by Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm because of their union-organizing activities.

In a written decision signed by board chairman Paul Weiler, the LRB does not say why they were fired or if they should have been fired, but only that it was not for union activities. The LRB is only concerned with that narrow part of the dispute covered in the labor code, the statement says.

Puddicombe and Halper were hired March 9 and 10 respectively after the Downtown Eastside Residents Association organized an unemployment protest at Vander Zalm's Art Knapp Nurseries Ltd. They started work at $3.50 an hour shovelling horse manure but were fired March 13.

They said they were fired because they were suspected of trying to organize a union. The company said they were fired for provoking the assistant manager.

Puddicombe, 28, said he now is working as a self-employed gardener and landscaper while Halper is employed in construction.

Puddicombe said the Unemployment Insurance Commission investigated his firing and had it found he had provoked the nursery into firing him, he would have lost his benefits. He did not lose this benefits until he began working recently, he said.

"That shows we didn't deliberately provoke them into firing us as they claimed," he said.

Yugoslav's Body Found

PORT ALICE (CP) — The body of Yugoslavian seaman Ivan Migar, 23, was recovered by police divers Wednesday from Victoria Lake, five kilometres east of this northwestern Vancouver Island community.

Police said Migar and two others from the Yugoslavian-registered M.V. Horotan were in a pleasure craft that overturned.

POT DANGER VERIFIED: MD

VANCOUVER (CP) — Doctors who have warned of the dangers of marijuana use now are being supported by results of recent scientific tests, the head of a city hospital's psychiatric department said Wednesday.

Dr. Conrad Schwarz told the annual meeting of the Alcohol-Drug Education Service that scientific evidence reinforces medical warnings against use of the drug.

"Marijuana is quite clearly a drug that develops tolerance," he told members of the voluntary organization.

He said that in early stages of use, people might need progressively less marijuana to get the same effect, but as usage continues more is required to produce the same effects.

Dr. Schwarz said tests showed that during pregnancy, marijuana's active ingredient passes through the placenta to the fetus. He said rats and rabbits produced fetal abnormalities when tested with the plant from which marijuana is harvested.

Other tests showed chromosomal breakdown in test subjects who had not used other drugs; decreased formation of DNA, the essential ingredient for cell growth and memory; as well as lung damage, moodiness and a reduced sperm count.

Dr. Schwarz said if dosage problems can be solved, marijuana may aid in immunizatioon of cancer and eliminating rejection of transplanted organs.

CUPE Settles In Okanagan

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A memorandum of agreement was reached early today between the Canadian Union of Public Employees local 900 and the Okanagan Mainline Municipal Labor Relations Association.

Siedo Tzogoeff, the association's chief negotiator, said details of the agreement will not be made public until a contract has been ratified by the 400 city employees.

The tentative agreement followed two days of bargaining talks attended by provincial mediator Fred Geddes.

Civic workers here were not affected by an OMMLRA-imposed lockout on union members at eight other municipalities last Thursday.

Unify Leisure

VERNON (CP) — The Recreation Society of British Columbia voted Thursday in favor of unifying the province's leisure services.

At its annual general meeting, the group voted to form a committee to work toward amalgamation with the B.C. Recreation Association and the B.C. Recreation Facilities Associations.

The vote was made on the basis of a report, prepared by a joint committee from the three groups, which detailed the lack of co-ordination between the bodies and the duplication of efforts.

"The concept of the proposed Parks and Recreation Association of B.C. is something our executive feels we need," said Janet Taylor, past president of the Recreation Society.

Jailed for Mischief

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kenneth Charles Hay, found guilty of mischief for a Jan. 12 incident during the Telecommunications' Workers Union strike against British Columbia Telephone Co. was sentenced in provincial court Thursday to 60 days in jail.

Hay, who was charged after windows of a company van were broken and its tires slashed, will serve the sentence on weekends.

Guilty of Stabbing

VANCOUVER (CP) — Patricia Ellen Froelich, 28, of Vancouver was found guilty Thursday of attempted murder in the stabbing of a Vancouver man in his home last year.

Alan Bartell, 23, was stabbed with a kitchen knife.

The British Columbia Supreme Court jury recommended that Froelich be given a minimum prison sentence and any psychiatric help that she may need.

Justice Vic Dryer said he will ask for more information before sentencing Froelich May 26.

Lady Alderman Okays Nude Male Dance Act

DELTA (CP) — More than 250 women, including alderman Lois Jackson, jammed into the Scottsdale Inn pub Wednesday night to scream, shout and applaud as a nude male dancer gyrated onstage, but none of the patrons removed any articles of their own clothing.

Mayor Tom Goode said Tuesday that members of the pub's all-female audiences were becoming so involved with the entertainment that some were taking off their clothes and dancing with the performers.

"It was an unusual evening, but I feel the fuss has been much ado about nothing," Mrs. Jackson said. "The audience was well controlled."

She was requested by Delta council, as the only female alderman, to report on the entertainment, because male patrons were barred from the nude shows.

"I've raised a son and I wasn't shocked or offended," Mrs. Jackson said, "And it's quite obvious the audience wants this sort of thing."

Pub manager Ralph Chorpita said no one in the female audience has ever removed her clothes and danced with the male stripper since the act was introduced one month ago.

Nude male dancing is featured once a week, and Chorpita said the turnout has increased since Goode's announcement. He said women arrive two to three hours early in anticipation of the show.

TRIDENT PROTESTER RETURNS

SEATTLE (AP) — Canadian resident James Douglass returned to passing out leaflets against the Trident submarine program Thursday outside the United States Navy base at Bangor, Wash., after agreeing not to enter the base pending trial.

Douglass, 40, of New Westminster, pleaded innocent to an April 18 trespassing charge Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Seattle and said he would not enter the base.

He had spent eight days in jail, but said after his release he felt he could do more outside jail to further the fight against Trident.

Nurses' Demands Rejected

VANCOUVER (CP) — Larry Truitt, president of the Vancouver General Hospital, has rejected a request by registered nurses in the hospital for immediate action to improve their status and deal with special demands.

At the end of a three-page notice to all VGH employees posted Thursday, Truitt said: "I make it perfectly clear that this hospital does not respond to petition democracy."

He also accused the nurses of lobbying for professional power and of issuing their statement "to the press before the hospital was given the courtesy of even seeing or considering it."

The reference was to a 300-signature petition and letter sent to Truitt by the nurses Monday. They asked for a reply by Friday for assurances "of the continuation of the development and implementation of our high nursing standards."

The nurses asked for a vice-president of nursing affairs in the new VGH administration, a committee to monitor the professional concerns of nurses and a better system by which recently-graduated nurses from community colleges can gain practical experience.

Truitt, in his reply, doesn't answer any of these requests but criticizes the nurses for their method and timing in making their complaints.

"There are good routes for achieving nurse's aspirations as there are for considering the aspirations and contributions of every group that comprises the health care community."

He also reminded the nurses they have their own organization — The Registered Nurses Association of B.C. — for professional concerns.

No Fraud in Land Deals

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A year-long RCMP investigation into Prince George-area land deals shows no evidence of fraud or other serious criminal wrongdoing by Mayor Haold Moffat, says a report to Crown prosecutor Don Kennedy.

Kennedy said Thursday that he is not certain if more information is coming from the RCMP but the report will be studied by regional Crown prosecutor Peter Ewert.

Moffat was anonymously accused last year of using his political office to help land developer Stu Wood.

The accusations, sent to the provincial attorney general's office, also suggested that Moffat was secretly bettering his own interests through inside information on city development plans.

B.C. Television did a series of stories about land deals here and libel action was later filed against BCTV.

INDIANS VICTIMS OF TALL TALES

BURNABY (CP) — An international group of experts on Captain James Cook, gathered at Simon Fraser University this week, agreed Thursday that British Columbia's Indian population was neither as murderous nor as larcenous as some early accounts have described.

Dr. Christon Archer, of the University of Calgary, said fur traders may have told gruesome stories to deter interlopers from competing in the traffic of otter pelts to the Orient while the natives themselves may have also told tall stories to frighten Franciscan friars and curb their missionary activities.

Dr. E. McCormick, of Aukland, New Zealand, said Cook's journals were the first to raise the question of cannibalism among Indians of the Pacific Northwest. He said this concern might have been a hemispheric carry-over as cannibalism had been encountered in the South Seas.

After Cook's third voyage, which brought him to B.C., the question of cannibalism on this coast became an obsession with the Spanish, he said.

MLA Urges Free Ferries For Students

Grade 10 students on the Lower Mainland should get free return tickets to travel here on the B.C. Ferry system to see the legislature in action, Ray Loewen (SC—Burnaby-Edmonds) said Thursday.

"Our democracy is only as strong as the involvement and understanding of the population," Loewen told Sam Bawlf, minister responsible for the ferry fleet.

Bawlf said in an interview that if Loewen feels that strongly about the matter, he should press the Speaker's office to provide grants to school boards.

Pipeline Firm Won't Give Up

OTTAWA (CP) — Trans Mountain Pipe Line Ltd. says it is conceivable a west coast oil port will be needed if the gap continues to grow between domestic oil supply and demand.

The Vancouver-based firm says in a brief to the National Energy Board that its pipeline facilities, now operating at less than capacity, could be used to supply imported oil to British Columbia and as far east as Ontario.

But in another brief to the board, Home Oil Ltd. says it believes domestic producers will be able to meet the needs of provinces as far east as Ontario and imports will not be needed for those markets.

The latest comments on the need for oil ports came in briefs to the board in preparation for its annual oil supply and demand hearings.

The government, which says a west coast oil port is not needed now, has asked the energy board to look at whether such a facility will be required in the 1980s and where it should be built.

Trans Mountain says its pipeline from Edmonton to Vancouver and south to the U.S. has a capacity to move 410,000 barrels a day, but is operating at only 140,000 barrels because of cuts in exports.

With minor modifications, costing just under $4 million, it could handle 150,000 barrels of imports daily.

Spending of $31 million would provide facilities to bring a further 150,000 barrels a day in through Roberts Bank deep-water port.

Keep Tour Buses — Unions

Two unions representing employees at the B.C. government-owned Pacific Stage Lines and Vancouver Island Coach Lines say the two bus companies should continue to supply special service work such as charters and sightseeing tours.

The position is stated in a brief submitted to a special committee set up to study ways of divesting the companies of so-called non-essential work by Dec. 31.

The committee is made up of representatives from the two bus companies, B.C. Hydro and the ministry of municipal affairs and housing.

Non-essential services include all charters, tours and sightseeing.

The two unions — the Amalgamated Transit Union and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway and Transport General Workers — label the move to give the non-essential work to other bus companies "the rape of public transit."

The brief says the two government bus companies must continue to provide the special service otherwise the province's all-important tourist industry will suffer.

"No private company will ever be able to fulfill this commitment to our tourists."

The unions say the private companies are not able to keep a sufficient number of highly trained and qualified people on a year-round basis in order to cope adequately with the special service demands.

The brief makes it clear that the special service work should always be profitable so as to reduce the over-all operating deficits incurred by regular service runs.

"It is about time some common sense thinking was put into these decisions that have far reaching consequences and affect our economy so drastically," the unions say.

"Let's not be taken in by fast-talking individuals that are out to make a fast buck at our expense.

"Instead of getting out of special service work let's work together to try and produce a viable transportation service that will enable the tourist industry in B.C. to grow."

Taxpayers Deserve Own Budget: Bennett

The Socred government is distributing a news-style version of the 1978-79 budget at an estimated cost to taxpayers of $90,000 because they deserve it.

That was the word Thursday from Premier Bill Bennett although he refused to disclose the annual costs of the B.C. Government News, a tabloid compiled by the premier's office and issued once a month to publicize the government.

The latest issue of the BCGN, dealing with the budget presented to the legislature April 10, is being sent to 975,945 households. It normally has a press run of 160,000.

Eileen Dailly (NDP—Burnaby-North) asked what the taxpayers have to pay for what she termed a Social Credit propaganda sheet.

Bennett said he was carrying on the tradition of government information that was carried on by the former NDP government and initiated by the Social Credit government the NDP defeated.

"Just recently we've had questions about the government not providing us with enough information, and now you're saying that we are providing too much information.

"I see nothing wrong with the people understanding what are direct excerpts out of the budget to every British Columbian, and I think every British Columbian deserves that information."

Bennett said that the costs would be available to the public accounts committee (which reviews expenses one year after the fact).

2-4-D in Okanagan Attacked by Stephens

Conservative leader Vic Stephens criticized the government Thursday for using the herbicide 2,4-D in the Okanagan Lake system despite a conservation ministry report warning against its application.

The internal report was prepared last summer by the habitat protection section of the fish and wildlife branch but was never widely circulated, said its author Rick Morley.

The government used a limited amount of 2,4-D last summer in conjunction with mechanical and biological methods to control the spread of Eurasian water milfoil in the lakes, and intends to step up its use this summer.

MPs Getting into Act With B.C. Rail Plea

OTTAWA (CP) — New Democrat MP Stuart Leggatt and Progressive Conservative Frank Oberle called on the federal government Thursday to help improve rail systems in northern British Columbia.

Leggatt (New Westminster) and Oberle (Prince George-Peace River) urged the government to help keep B.C. Rail's Fort Nelson extension in service because it will be used to transport material for construction of the northern natural gas pipeline.

Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen confirmed in the Commons that the B.C. government had asked for federal financial assistance, but would not reveal the sum involved.

A provincial royal commission inquiring into the railway has recommended that the 400-kilometre extension, which needs $36 million of improvements, be abandoned.

"If any transportation system is required by the pipeline in order to udertake the project, then of course it is possible to consider charging the pipeline company directly for that," said MacEachen, minister responsible for the northern pipeline.

Proclaim 1919 Law —Gibson

Liberal leader Gordon Gibson urged the Socred government Thursday to proclaim a law approved by the legislature 59 years ago.

The law, An Act to provide for the Initiation and Approval of Legislation by the Electors, was approved by the legislature March 29, 1919, and would permit the citizens to request and approve certain laws.

"As I understand it, it is still a valid act and could be proclaimed at the cabinet's next meeting," Gibson said.

"The act provides that legislation must be put to the legislature for enactment if requested by not less than 25 per cent of the total electors of the province. If the legislature then refuses to pass the act, it must be put to the electors in a referendum, and if approved becomes law."

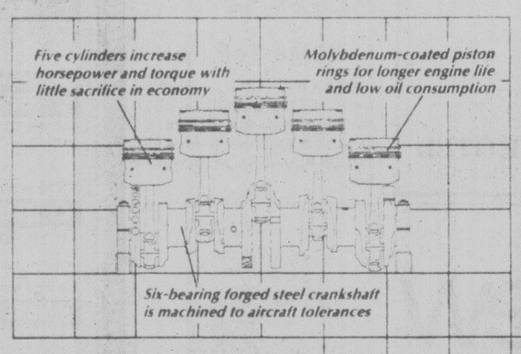
You won't know it's a diesel when you pull out to pass. Just when you pull up to the pumps.



For over 40 years, practical motorists have been attracted to the Mercedes-Benz diesels for their mileage, maintenance economy and legendary durability.

Since the introduction of our unique, fuel-injected 5-cylinder diesel engine, there's a new reason to buy a diesel: performance.

This diesel is not turtle-paced or timid. It passes with power; it whispers at speed. On the autobahn in Germany, it cruises comfortably at 130 kph. Here in Canada, it will accelerate to highway speed without effort and maintain that speed all day long.

But there's more to performance than speed. And more to a Mercedes-Benz than an efficient, responsive engine.

Features you won't find in any other diesel

At Mercedes-Benz, we never forget the most important element in a car's design: the driver. That's why every Mercedes-Benz has luxury, safety and performance features you won't find in any other diesel.

Drive over a very rough road surface and experience the world's most advanced suspension system. No jostle. No vibration. No jerking of the wheel.

Drive in city traffic and appreciate the precise power-assisted steering system. The highest praise of this system may be that it seldom feels like power steering. You never have to fight the wheel but you retain that all-important "feel of the road".

Apply the brakes and you'll be reassured by the solid force generated by four disc brakes and the straight line tracking assisted by zero-offset steering. The latter system prevents hard braking on broken road surfaces from jostling the car off course. Introduced in 1972, it's now standard equipment on all Mercedes-Benz automobiles.

Inside a Mercedes-Benz you have a complete array of security and convenience features within easy reach. All are standard equipment. Such things as cruise control with a "memory", bi-level climate control, power windows, AM/FM stereo with power antenna, central locking system and 3-speed windshield wipers.

The remarkable new 300CD

The newest diesel from Mercedes-Benz is the extraordinary 300CD coupe—a limited production two-door automobile with five-cylinder diesel power. It combines thrift with elegance, performance with common sense.

Of course, common sense is what diesel technology is all about. Its economy goes far beyond good mileage.

Whether you choose the attractive 300D sedan or the classic new coupe there are practical advantages inherent with this advanced diesel technology.

No spark plugs to change. No carburetor to adjust. No distributor to replace. Conventional "tune ups" are simply not required.

With the added cylinder, Mercedes-Benz has kept this practicality while adding smoothness and performance. You need only test drive it to appreciate it.

Engineered like no other car in the world.

The engineers are the heroes at Mercedes-Benz and they have but one objective: it is to build safe, responsive, practical cars—with as few imperfections as possible.

This philosophy puts engineering ahead of petty economies and precludes the mass production of inexpensive cars. It allows little room for compromise or for shortcuts; just the pursuit of engineering excellence.

A Mercedes-Benz is engineered like no other car in the world.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

An 18-year-old Saanich youth who was sentenced in Victoria provincial court March 16 to two months in jail for his third refusal to do community service work reappeared in court Thursday and was charged with breaking and entering and possession of stolen property.

Gregory William Hibbert, 2634 Quadra, was charged with a part in the Feb. 17 break-in at Capital Market Ltd., and with possession of meat, cheese, cigarettes and money taken from the break-in.

Hibbert, who indicated to police his address at present is Jordan River camp, received a week's remand from Judge Blake Allan for election of trial method.

★ ★ ★

A 23-year-old Campbell River man was charged with escaping lawful custody.

Richard Ernest Alexander was charged with escaping from Wilkinson Road jail May 8 and was remanded until next Thursday for election.

★ ★ ★

"I guess the only time you stay out of trouble is when you're in custody," Allan remarked before sentencing 59-year-old Frank Peter Ellis to 30 days in jail.

Ellis pleaded guilty to theft under $200.

Crown counsel Don Laughton told the court Ellis entered the hostess shop in the lower floor of Eaton's and shoplifted two tins of mackerel valued at $1.18.

Laughton suggested he did not need to acquaint Allan with Ellis' criminal history, which fills 18 pages.

★ ★ ★

Kevin John Case, also known as Kevin John Kaiser, pleaded guilty to shoplifting and was remanded to May 26 for a pre-sentence report and sentencing.

Laughton said Case went into the Canada Safeway store at 1950 Foul Bay at about 10 a.m. and took groceries, meats, two tape rules and two hammers without paying and was pursued outside the store by employees. Case, who was riding a 10-speed bicycle, was apprehended about a block away, Laughton said.

Case, of 1760 Adanac, told Allan the theft was not for his own benefit but for his children, aged five and six.

Strike Toll Up

OTTAWA (CP) — There were 365,720 man-days lost due to lockouts and strikes in January, up from a loss of 353,130 man-days in December.

Accuser Mars Testimony

NANAIMO (CP) — A man who charged three RCMP constables with assault causing bodily harm was arrested for being drunk Wednesday, a county court trial was told Thursday.

Earlier in the trial, Robert Simms had testified that it was out of character for him to create a disturbance or swear when he described what happened to him at the Ladysmith RCMP station Oct. 2, 1977.

During Thursday's testimony in the case against Ladysmith constables Bruce Waite, Dave Downey and William Van Wormer, Nanaimo RCMP Constable Alvin Knapp said Simms threatened him with a fist and yelled at him when he was arrested on Wednesday.

Knapp said he saw Simms walking unsteadily along a city street at 1.20 a.m. Wednesday carrying a realtor's for-sale sign.

He said he chased Simms for two blocks before he found him in a ditch at the side of the road. When he took him to the police station, he was not co-operative.

Knapp said Simms made a fist when he tried to get him into a cell and it required a good push on Simms' shoulder to get him behind bars as the guard slammed the door.

Ship Robbers Plead Guilty

Two brothers charged with armed robbery of $18,800 from HMCS Terra Nova in January entered guilty pleas to four charges in Victoria county court Thursday and were adjourned to May 16 for sentence.

Lloyd Charles Fredericks, 48, and Frank Irvin Fredericks, 45, pleaded guilty to charges of confining Capt. Peter McIntyre and his wife Candice, to using a firearm while committing robbery and to stealing money from McIntyre while armed with an offensive weapon.

The Crown ordered stays of proceedings on further counts of breaking, entering and theft at the McIntyre home, 719 Connaught; to kidnapping Peter McIntyre, and to possession of approximately $19,000 knowing it was stolen.

Crown counsel Peter Birkett read previous convictions against Lloyd Fredericks dating from 1946 for breaking, entering and theft (two), theft of automobile (two) and driving with blood alcohol exceeding .08 per cent, and against Frank Fredericks for impaired driving. Defence counsel David Lisson and Christopher Wilson asked for pre-sentence reports.

Birkett described how the accused rang at the front door of McIntyre's Victoria West home at 7:40 p.m. Jan. 14, and when Mrs. McIntyre answered walked in wearing partial disguises and carrying a pistol and a sawed-off shotgun.

Lloyd wore a large wig and his brother a blue stocking mask and fedora. They bound and gagged Mrs. McIntyre, leaving her with Frank while Lloyd took her husband at pistol point to the ship where he was logistics officer in charge of payroll.

At the ship, McIntyre was recognized and allowed to proceed aboard with his abductor and a briefcase to the office where the ship's cash was kept in a safe. The officer had a key, knew the combination and opened it, filling the briefcase with bundles of bills.

The two got back to the jetty, through security and to McIntyre's home without being challenged, and the intruders left the officer and his wife, both bound, at about 8:30, after cutting the telephone line.

Plant Warning Ignored

The owner of Delta's Spetifore Frozen Foods Ltd. which recently closed because of financial difficulties, was told in 1974 that the operation would not be economically viable.

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt said Wednesday George Spetifore had attempted to obtain provincial help for a french fries plant but was turned down because studies showed there was not enough of a market locally to support such a venture.

Spetifore used his own financing to start the operation in 1976, but announced last week that he had lost $5 million and was closing it down.

Hewitt said the local market is too small to allow Spetifore to achieve the production volume necessary to keep unit costs at an acceptable level.

Several eastern french fry producers receive federal and provincial aid, making them more viable than the totally independent Spetifore operation.

Potato growers in the Vancouver area were left holding about 14,000 tons of potatoes as a result of the Spetifore closure.

Convicted Twice In Week

For the second time in a week, John Matthew Sidney, 29, of Victoria, was convicted in county court Thursday for being in possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking.

Judge Peter Millward sentenced the accused to 30 days in jail for the offence dating from Dec. 18, 1976, in which a quantity of marijuana was found in his Graham Street apartment. Sidney had pleaded not guilty and a trial was completed Thursday.

On Monday, Sidney appeared before Judge E.J.C. Stewart and pleaded guilty to having one pound of marijuana for trafficking Mar. 22, 1978, and was fined $1,500 or three months in jail.

Canadians Win Fishing

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — The first round to bar Canadians from salmon fishing off the Washington state coast has gone to the Canadians, but the Washington Trollers Association gets another day in court next month.

The outcome of the trollers' suit could have nationwide legal repercussions on the 200-mile fishing limit.

United States District Judge Donald Voorhees has rejected a temporary restraining order requested by the trollers to block Canadian fishing for salmon off the U.S. coast. But Voorhees set a May 5 hearing date on a preliminary injunction which would do the same thing.

The association contends Canadian fishing, due to start next week, would violate the 1976 federal law, which restricted foreign fishing within 200 miles of the United States coast.

The federal government contends Canadians must be allowed to continue fishing off Washington, so that negotiations between the two nations concerning fisheries resources are not jeopardized.

The dispute threatens to complicate an already complex struggle over fishing rights.

Voorhees' decision came after arguments for and against the restraining order. Those arguments centered on the delicacy of international relations and claimed the federal government is violating its own laws.

"This is an incredible case," said Scott Stafne, lawyer for the trollers. "Everyone involved, from the president to the fishermen, knows that allowing Canadians to fish salmon off the coast of Washington state violates current federal law.

Milky Way Centre Anti-Matter Site?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists have evidence that a surprising amount of "anti-matter" may exist in the centre of the Milky Way galaxy, which they say might furnish important clues about the formation of the universe.

Physicists said Wednesday that a detector hoisted 130,000 feet aloft by a balloon picked up evidence of increased anti-matter activity when pointed at the galactic centre.

Drs. Marvin Leventhal of Bell Laboratories and Crawford MacCallum of Sandia Laboratories said the discovery opens the door to "learning important new things about the high energy processes of the universe."

Scientists studying the basic properties of matter have concluded that for every kind of atomic or sub-atomic particle existing in nature, there also must exist anti-matter, an almost identical particle with an opposite electrical charge.

Leventhal said there are theories on how the universe was formed which conclude that there were equal amounts of matter and anti-matter. But large quantities of anti-matter have never been identified.

"It is possible the results we have could be interpreted as meaning there is bulk anti-matter in our galaxy," Leventhal told a news briefing at the spring meeting of the American Physical Society. "It is exciting to think that there could be big chunks of anti-matter floating around."

Ordinary matter is composed of atoms consisting of negatively charged electrons bound to positively charged nuclei. These nuclei are made up of many particles, the most familiar of which are positively charged protons and neutrons, which have no charge.

A unique property of particle and anti-particle pairs is that if they get close, they can annihilate each other and release large amounts of energy.

The most commonly known anti-particle is an anti-electron with a positive charge, called a positron. When electrons and positrons annihilate each other, they produce gamma ray photons.

Service Comes To Life

All those who are familiar with the earthy characters that appear in the poems of Robert Service and his tremendous feeling for the life and times of the Yukon of early days, will be delighted to have it all come to life tonight through the art of Toronto actor Charles Hayter.

His performance takes place at the Newcombe Auditorium, starting at 8 p.m. and there is no admission charge.

Hayter reincarnates the life of the sourdough, the forever ice-bound Sam McGee and Bessie, and others, expressing each personality through voice and facial mobility. His recitations are not confined to Service's humor, however, but explore as well the poignant and atmospheric poems such as Wanderlust, Trees Against the Sky, and The Pines. An animated story-teller, Hayter has been delighting audiences across Canada.

Books of Service's poetry will be on sale before and after the performance and a percentage of the sale proceeds will be donated to the Friends of the Provincial Museum.

Cough Syrup Removed

DETROIT (Reuter) — Parke Davis and Co. said Wednesday it has stopped over-the-counter distribution of its Benylin cough syrup at the request of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and that in the future, consumers will need a doctor's prescription to buy it.

It said the FDA request was based on a tentative decision that products containing diphenydramine hydrochloride, the active ingredient in Benylin, should be accompanied by prescription labelling due to concern about potential drowsiness.

Parke Davis said an administrative hearing to determine the ultimate status of the drug was held last fall and a decision is pending.

Supercar is here.

We're calling our Acadians 'Supercars'. The reasons?

First of all, the price. Our 2-door Hatchback is less than a Honda Civic. Less than a Ford Fiesta. Less than a Toyota Corolla 1200. Less than a Datsun B 210 and substantially less than a Volkswagen Rabbit.

Second of all, super standard features. Four on the floor.* Centre console. Reclining front bucket seats. AM radio. Carpeting. Snappy white stripe bias-belted tires. And a 1.6 litre overhead cam engine for super performance.

Third of all, gas mileage. Our little Supercar is able to go 50 highway miles on a gallon of gas. 37 miles per gallon in the city. It already meets gas mileage requirements set by the federal government for the 1980's.

Fourthly, we've got two super models. There's our nifty 2-door Hatchback. And our new 4-door Hatchback. Both have lots of room for you and three friends.

*Automatic Transmission Available at Extra Cost

SUPERCAR

And last, but not least, it's from General Motors. Which means that all the the engineering and expertise of the world's largest car company goes into each car. Plus every Supercar comes with an exclusive 4-colour striping and super decals that make it stand apart from mild-mannered, every day cars.

Acadian. The gas economy of the 1980's. The engineering of the 20th Century. And all at a price that will make you a super hero with your budget.

Trade in that dull, mild-mannered car you're driving and change into a Supercar. Only available at Empress Pontiac Buick. Have a real driving adventure.

Price $4,124.00

A lament heard frequently after one has gone down at a game or slam contract is: "Partner, I got a bad break in the trump suit." At times, the lament is justified; at times, it is not. The latter was the case in today's deal.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♠.

After winning the opening lead with his club king, West continued with the club ace. He then led his remaining club to East's queen. To trick four East played a diamond, South's ace winning.

Declarer's next play was to cash his king of trumps — and West discarded a spade. It was now impossible to prevent East, who had the J-10—4 of trumps remaining, from capturing the setting trick.

Declarer got a bad break in the trump suit, for if the trumps had been divided either 2-2 or 3-1, the loss of a trump trick would have been avoided no matter how declarer played the trump suit. And if West had the four outstanding trumps, then West couldn't be prevented from winning a trump trick: in this case, whenever South led a low trump out of his hand, West would put up the ten-spot, forcing dummy's ace and promoting his jack into a winner.

Therefore declarer's concern should have been the possibility that East possessed the four outstanding trumps; and his first trump lead should have been the five to dummy's ace. With West failing to follow suit, a trump would next be led out of North's hand, and East would insert his ten, which South would take with the queen.

The board would then be re-entered via the spade ace, and a third trump would be made. East's remaining doubleton J-4 would be entrapped by South's K-9. The rest of the tricks would then belong to declarer. By playing the trump suit as recommended, declarer's only losers would have been the three club tricks he lost at the outset.

New AIB Enforcer

OTTAWA (CP) — William Oliver, a nine-year veteran of the public service, will take over May 1 as enforcer of the government's mandatory pay-and-price controls program, Prime Minister Trudeau announced Thursday.

Oliver, 57, replaces Donald Tansley as administrator of the Anti-Inflation Act. Tansley, 53, has already been appointed associate deputy minister of fisheries and chairman of the Fisheries Research Board.

The administrator has powers to review recommendations of the Anti-Inflatin Board on prices and wages, can order compliance with government guides and can impose penalties such as fines or imprisonment for offenders.

Oliver has been deputy administrator since 1976. Previously, he had spent seven years with the treasury board, becoming a specialist in labor negotiations.

In that role, he was involved in many of the disputes involving air traffic controllers, postal workers and other government employees in the early and mid-1970s.

Tansley, a Saskatchewan native, had held the post of administrator from December, 1975; two months after the controls program was imposed by the government.

The government began eliminating controls last April 14.

Muzzled Money Watchdog In Maddening Spot: PCs

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservatives said Thursday night the government's new financial watchdog will have no teeth and shortly will end up in a straight jacket.

They made the criticism of the government's lack of concrete definition of the new position of comptroller-general as one of their number said the Liberals have made Parliament completely irrelevant.

And these charges were made after Conservative Leader Joe Clark said the government is using the Export Development Corp., (EDC), designed to help exports, to hide government indebtedness,

The remarks came in two debates in the Commons which saw a bill to refinance the EDC get approval in principle and another, to create the comptroller-general, procede toward third and final reading.

The comptroller-general is being created on the recommendation of Auditor-General J . J. Macdonell in 1976 when he said the government had lost control of spending.

Harry Rogers already has been appointed comptroller-general, although the legislation creating his position has not passed through Parliament. He is to have deputy minister's status and report to the president of the treasury board.

Conservatives unsuccessfully attempted to amend the legislation to spell out his duties. The government insisted that this must be done by regulation, as is the case of all deputy ministers.

Conservatives such as Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre) and Dan Friesen (Kootenay West) said government spending is so out of control, Rogers will be in a straight jacket in a month of attempting to deal with it.

They and Marcel Lambert (Edmonton Centre), House Leader Walter Baker, James MacGrath (St. John's West) and others said the new official will have no teeth to deal with spending if they are not provided in the legislation.

Lloyd Francis (L—Ottawa-West) said the government must have the power to define Roger's terms of reference so that they do not conflict with those of the auditor-general and the president of the treasury board.

Tom Lefavbre, parliamentary secretary to Treasury Board President Roberf Andras, said Rogers himself feels in no way restricted.

He added: "The comptroller-general is in effect on duty now. He has started his work on April 1."

Dean Whiteway (PC-Selkirk) said the government is ignoring Macdonell's recommendation by not spelling out Rogers's duties and Lambert said if Rogers is going to be a watchdog on behalf of Parliament then Parliament must set his duties.

McGrath said 10 years ago the Liberal majority of the day forced changes in procedures that ended effective control by the Commons of government spending.

The government had made Parliament a totally irrelevant institution as far as watching spending was concerned.

He said the television cameras should show how irrelevant the House had become by showing the low attendance — nine Liberals and nine members of the opposition.

A Conservative amendment that would have outlined the duties of the comptroller-general was defeated without a recorded vote.

Earlier the Conservatives allowed legislation increasing the financing of the EDC to get approval in principle so it could go to committee where they planned to seek amendments slicing the amount of financial authority the government is seeking for the corporation.

Bank Loan Defaults Rising

OTTAWA (CP) — Poor economic conditions have led to more pleas from domestic business for protection against imports and an increase in bank loan defaults, officials told the Commons finance committee.

David Kirkwood, chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, told MPs it was his impression that the agency's work-load has increased substantially over the last two or three years because of the economic climate.

And William Kennett, inspector-general of banks, agreed with suggestions that banks are having to write off more loans because of a larger number of business failures.

Chretien to Examine Women's Pension Cost

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Jean Chretien said Thursday he will examine whether government and private pension plans discriminate against women.

Responding to questions in the Commons from Stanley Knowles (NDP—Winnipeg North Centre), Chretien said he will ask the superintendent of insurance to study whether Canadian pension plans contravene the Human Rights Act and will report to Parliament.

Knowles's question was prompted by a United States Supreme Court ruling earlier this week that employers must no longer require women to make larger payments to retirement funds than men simply because women live longer.

Knowles said pension plans and insurance policies should be set up so there is no discrimination. He said this should include elimination of separate actuarial tables which calculate how long men and women are expected to live. And therefore the cost of the pensions.

Those who say these tables discriminate against women advocate the use of tables which would calculate pension costs purely on the basis of age regardless of sex.

Chretien said he would ask the superintendent of insurance to look into this as well.

Separatist Cause Helped?

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said Thursday the regular attack of his government by the opposition parties is "playing into the hands of the separatists."

Trudeau told his weekly news conference that the opposition parties, in their desire "to attack the government on everything," are making errors in judgment that help the separatists cause.

"Their systematic attack of the government is playing into the hands of the separatists," he said.

"This seems to astonish you," Trudeau told reporters. "Go around in Quebec and ask yourself if this isn't an argument used by the separatists themselves.

"They say 'even the opposition parties say that (Quebec Finance Minister Jacques) Parizeau is right, even the media say he's right, so he must be right.' "

Trudeau said he was not saying that it was wrong for the opposition to criticize the government "but I don't think it's . . . wrong to criticize those who are criticizing us."

The opposition parties have attacked Trudeau's handling of the reduction of provincial sales taxes in the April 10 federal budget saying there wasn't enough consultation with the provinces.

Trudeau Joshes Tories

OTTAWA CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau suggested jokingly Thursday he may break off friendships with senior public servants so they can keep their jobs after any change in government.

He was questioned at his weekly news conference about opposition suggestions that top bureaucrats would have to go under a Progressive Conservative government because they have been too cosy with the Liberals.

Mentioned specifically as Trudeau friends were Michael Pitfield, secretary to the cabinet; William Teron, head of the federal housing and urban affairs programs; Ivan Head, longtime Trudeau aide just appointed head of a federal foreign aid agency and Sylvia and Bernard Ostry, husband-wife careerists who head the Economic Council of Canada and the communications ministry respectively.

Two MPs Appointed To Bench

OTTAWA (CP) — Two MPs, including a Liberal who denied Wednesday he was seeking a judicial appointment and said he would run in the next election, were named judges Thursday by Prime Minister Trudeau.

John Gilbert (NDP—Toronto-Broadview) who announced several months ago he was retiring, and Hugh Poulin (L—Ottawa-Centre) will become Ontario County Court judges, Trudeau told his weekly news conference.

Gilbert, 56 and an MP since 1965, will sit on the bench of the Ontario County and Districts Court while Poulin will be on the County Court of Ottawa-Carleton.

Public Foots Legal Bills

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government is using public funds to operate a special legal aid service for cabinet ministers, Conservative MP Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar) said Thursday.

In the Commons, Hnatyshyn criticized the government's decision Wednesday to pay the lawyer for Supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer to appeal an Ontario Supreme Court judgment that he should pay a senior public servant $10,000 for libel.

He called on the government "in a sense of equity" to also pay appeal court costs for the public servant, Lawrence Stopforth.

Prime Minister Trudeau rejected the proposition that every time a citizen sued the government or a minister the government should pay the costs of the "sue-er."

Earlier this week, Hnatyshyn and other Opposition MPs expressed outrage when Justice Minister Ron Basford said the government would pay the $10,000 damages levied against Goyer if there was no appeal.

Basford cited several precedents which say the government should take responsibility for actions or statements by a cabinet minister in the performance of his duties.

Hnatyshyn asked Trudeau whether the government paid costs for former transport minister Jean Marchand who was sued for libel by Ottawa assistant Crown attorney Andrejs Berzins. The case was settled out of court, with Marchand apologizing publicly to Berzins.

Hnatyshyn also asked whether the government paid John Turner's legal fees when the former finance minister sued the CBC for libel. That case was also settled out of court with an apology from the CBC.

Trudeau refused to answer because he said Hnatyshyn was making a debating point.

In view of the decision to pay Goyer's costs, it would have been logical for the government to pay Marchand's and Turner's costs, Hnatyshyn said in an interview.

He said the Goyer case sets "a very dangerous precedent."

"No matter what a minister does or says outside the performance of his duties, he can always rest assured he will be indemnified from the public purse."

The government has set up "a very selective kind of public legal aid extended to the cabinet which is not extended to the rank and file," he said.

Mr. Justice Abraham Lieff ruled earlier this month that Goyer's statements outside the House on June 1, 1976, were defamatory. Goyer said in the House that day that Stopforth had misinformed him and was grossly negligent.

At the time, Stopforth was deputy manager on the project team buying a new long range patrol aircraft for the armed forces.

RCMP's PQ List 'Revealed Little'

MONTREAL (CP) — RCMP Staff Sgt. Bernard Limoges, a custodian of secret files at RCMP Headquarters in Ottawa, testified Thursday that Parti Quebecois membership lists had become a "useless" source of information by 1975.

"The benefits we anticipated were not there," Limoges told a three-man royal commission into RCMP wrongdoing.

The RCMP Security Service had taken, copied and returned computer tapes containing the lists on Jan. 9, 1973, in a carefully-planned operation code-named Ham.

Print-outs were then made from the tapes and were stored in a vault at RCMP headquarters. Limoges said only he and one other officer had the combination to the vault.

Only a handful of Security Service men in the anti-terrorist branch had access to the membership lists. During the more than two years before the lists were destroyed by the RCMP July 18, 1975, he received about a dozen requests to consult them, Limoges said.

Access was based on a "need-to-know" system, he said. But he told the commission that out of curiosity, he had examined the list to see if anyone in his family was named.

"My name wasn't on the list," the veteran Mountie deadpanned.

Royal Commissioner Donald Rickerd of Toronto asked whether anyone else had checked the list out of curiosity. Limoges said no.

Limoges proposed in a memo June 26, 1975, that the tapes and print-outs be destroyed for the following reasons: "The directives from the Director General on the subject of the Parti Quebecois;" "our new mandate;" "Ham dates from 1972;" and the infrequent use and "sensitivity" of the Ham material.

QUEBEC TO LOOK SOUTH?

EVANSTON, Ill. (CP) — Bernard Landry, Quebec economic development minister, said Thursday that if the rest of Canada refuses economic association with an independent Quebec, there would be "a strong temptation to look south."

"Our first choice is association with the rest of Canada," Landry told political-science students at Northwestern University.

"If not, we will reconsider. "It is more rational for us to make trade with New York or Boston rather than Vancouver, Saskatoon or Moose Jaw."

Landry said that rejection of association by the rest of Canada was improbable.

Tax Aid For Gas Stations

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan service station operators close to the Alberta border will get $1 million in aid this year because of differences in gasoline taxes in the two provinces.

The government announced Thursday that the grants are retroactive to April 1, the day Alberta eliminated all provincial taxes on gasoline. The Saskatchewan gasoline tax is 19 cents a gallon.

Service station operators in Saskatchewan within 48 kilometres of the Alberta border will be eligible for the grants, based on the amount of gasoline they purchased for resale.

Where there is Alberta competition within the same community, such as at border-straddling Lloydminster, the grant will amount to 18 cents a gallon. Where the operator is 48 kilometres from the nearest Alberta competitor, the grant is five cents a gallon.

Service stations within 24 kilometres of Alberta competition will get 10 cents a gallon.

An estimated 112 businesses will benefit from the program.

Roy Bailey (PC—Rosetown-Elrose) said his checks indicated that service stations as far away as 110 kilometres from the border were suffering sales drops. The 48-kilometre limit won't reach those operators, he said.

Neil McMillan (L—Kindersley) said the largest independent gasoline wholesaler in Saskatchewan was located in Kindersley and that operator may have to lay-off 10 workers because of the sales lost since April 1.

McMillan said the delay in implementing a program had hurt many operators and the limitations on the grants would leave many without help.

Fords Faulty, Gov't Warns

OTTAWA (CP) — The transport department Thursday warned owners of 1965-74 full-sized Ford cars to have their vehicles inspected for possible malfunction of the steering assembly which could result in an accident.

The department said in a release the inspection should look for possible separation of the idler arm from the frame of the car or unusual stiffness in the joint of the idler arm.

The Ford Motor Co. of Canada was found guilty April 4 of failing to notify owners of 1971-73 models of the defect in the steering assembly that could affect their safe operation. The charge covered only 1971-73 vehicles because the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, under which it was laid, did not take effect until 1971.

The act does not require the manufacturer to pay for the repairs or replacement of parts required to correct the defect although the department said manufacturers have usually covered this cost in defect recalls.

Ford has indicated it plans to appeal the verdict, which was handed down in county court, but has not yet done so.

The department release quoted Transport Minister Otto Lang as saying if there is any possibility of a defective idler arm, it should be replaced "even though this might have to be done at the owner's expense."

"Owners should consider this recommended corrective action to ensure their own safety and that of others," the release quoted Lang as saying.

Evidence introduced at the three-week trial of Ford indicated a joint in the idler arm rusts.

Smuggler's Plots End with a Jail Term

The next day Ahern flew to Los Angeles.

The other Victoria businessman returned home. He has adamantly denied any knowledge of the arms affair although his name crops up repeatedly in earlier investigations surrounding Ahern's activities.

While in Los Angeles, Ahern met Morelli and the undercover agent. Ahern was to supply the ship and Morelli was to captain the vessel. There was talk about the size of ship and what port should be used to take on the illicit cargo. All that remained was for the agent to meet the dealer and hand over the money.

On Jan. 20, Morelli and Ahern flew to New York but because of snow were forced down in Chicago where they spent the night. They completed the journey the next day and met the agent who arrived that morning. Arrangements were made to meet the organized crime partner at his plant in New Jersey the following day.

When they showed up, however, the arms dealer curtly told them the deal was off. Customs agents had taken positions around the plant in anticipation of the arrest which never came.

Agents said later the dealer had recognized one of the agents.

Ahern was apparently devastated by the turn of events and he and Morelli spent the remainder of the day at their hotel near La Guardia airport. According to the CLEU spokesman, Ahern never suspected the undercover agent and even tried to get the name of another arms dealer to replace the New Jersey gangster.

The next day as Ahern and Morelli sat down for breakfast they were arrested by U.S. federal customs' officials.

They pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charge March 31.

Born in Scotland, Ahern served as a trooper in the British Army between 1949 ad 1953. He came to Canada in 1955 and for the next 15 years worked as a ship's rigger at Burrard Drydock in North Vancouver, becoming a Canadian citizen in 1969. The same year he moved to Victoria where he worked off and on as a rigger at Dockyard and Yarrows.

A former workmate described Ahern as a loner.

"He seemed to be always on the phone," he said. "Nobody knew what he was up to."

Ahern was fired from his job at Dockyard last Oct. 6. The reason given was for a series of unexplained absences from work.

Nearly all of Ahern's business was carried out over the phone. CLEU officers said he averaged about $1,200 in long-distance calls a month and was more than $3,000 in debt to B.C. Tel when he was arrested.

He phoned all over the world. A list made during December and January showed calls to Hong Kong, Jamaica, Peru, Venezuela, Mexico, Luxemburgh, as well as several hundred to a score of cities in the United States and Canada.

Police said it appears Ahern never made any money as a trader. He had filed for unemployment insurance in January, at the very time he was making arrangements to complete his million dollar arms deal.

He paid for his travel bills and hotels by credit card and his home was sparsely furnished.

Police who checked the home said he slept on a rubber foam mattress laid on the floor. His office consisted of two patio chairs and a kitchen table used as a desk and his only luxury was an electric typewriter.

According to a business colleague, who asked not to be identified, Ahern had tried to get into commodity trading.

He was part of a loose federation of commodity traders around the world, known amongst themselves as the Daisy Chain.

The Daisy Chain members wheel and deal in contracts. For a fraction of a percentage point they set up and arrange shipments of commodities such as soya beans, oil and concrete from one country to another.

Ahern had managed to collect several hundred contacts after more than a decade working his way up the ladder. Among the names police found in his address book were commodity dealers from around the world, as well as the name of the New Jersey arms dealer, boxed in with red ink on the first page.

Ahern always set his sights high. In the late 1960s, while he was living in North Vancouver, he was involved, police say, in a dubious enterprise which attempted to raise $50 million for investment in a major life insurance company and an American trucking firm.

The trucking firm had known links with organized crime. But the money-raising project failed.

In January, 1972, Ahern formed his own shipping company and the next month approached a Victoria investment house for an $8 million loan. He said he intended to invest $5.5 million and put the remainder in a gold mine in California.

The banker's impression as recorded by police was Ahern seemed a dreamer and "perhaps a little unstable."

Police believe Ahern was involved in a number of other schemes. There was a commodity deal to supply 320 million gallons of jet fuel a month to Holland. That fell through when he was unable to get the necessary financing.

In 1976, Ahern formed another company called Ahern Marine Servicing and Manufacturing Limited. The company has an authorized capital of one million shares without par value.

Ahern's pet project was a superport in Esquimalt Harbor, aimed at re-vitalizing the shipbuilding industry on the west coast and making Victoria a major bulk oil centre for the province.

Ahern pursued the idea and applied for a $400 million loan through Croesus Investments of Winnipeg.

It is perhaps ironic that the very week Ahern was arrested, police intercepted a letter from Larry Chia, president of Croesus advising Ahern the money could be raised and he was prepared to process a 10-year loan at an interest rate of 7.9384058 per cent compounded anually. There was one proviso — Ahern had to name a guarantor.

It is not known if he ever got the letter.

Babies Will Live Longer

NEW YORK (AP) — Babies born in the United States last year will live an average of 73 years—an all-time high—an insurance company report said Thursday.

The statistical bureau of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. said the figure for 1977 is 0.2 years more than the life expectancy computed for children born the year before, and 2.3 years more than for those born in 1969-71.

Firemen Vote Strike

Victoria firemen took a tough stand in their contract dispute with the city and voted Thursday night for a limited type of strike action.

Union secretary-treasurer Paul Hansen said the 85-per-cent strike vote came after the members "turned thumbs down" on a new proposal from the city.

The 115 firefighters today served 72-hour strike notice but will not be able to take any action for more than a week as another meeting involving mediator Clark Gilmour has been set for next Thursday.

No strike action is allowed until a mediator has withdrawn from a dispute and filed a report with the labor minister.

Carl Anshelm, negotiator for the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association which bargains for the city, met with the firemen Thursday.

He suggested both sides withdraw all unresolved matters and the only change in the firemen's contract, which expired Dec. 31, 1977, be a four-per-cent increase in salary.

Hansen said the firemen were unanimous in rejecting "this offer."

The firemen have designed a three-phase strike plan whereby they would report for work and respond to all emergencies, providing life-and-limb protection.

However, in the first phase, for example, certain commercial areas in the city would be designated as "struck areas" and once the firemen were assured the buildings had been evacuated, fire control lines would be pulled back to the borders of the area.

This policy would not apply to hotels, apartment blocks or hospitals.

If the firemen got into the other two phases the policy would apply on a progressive basis to residential areas.

The firemen are seeking a six-per-cent increase in a one-year contract, the maximum allowable under the federal anti-inflation guidelines.

Anshelm said in a prepared statement Thursday that such an increase plus the other reclassifications, sick leave increases and costly premiums being sought by the Victoria group would make them the highest paid firefighters in B.C.

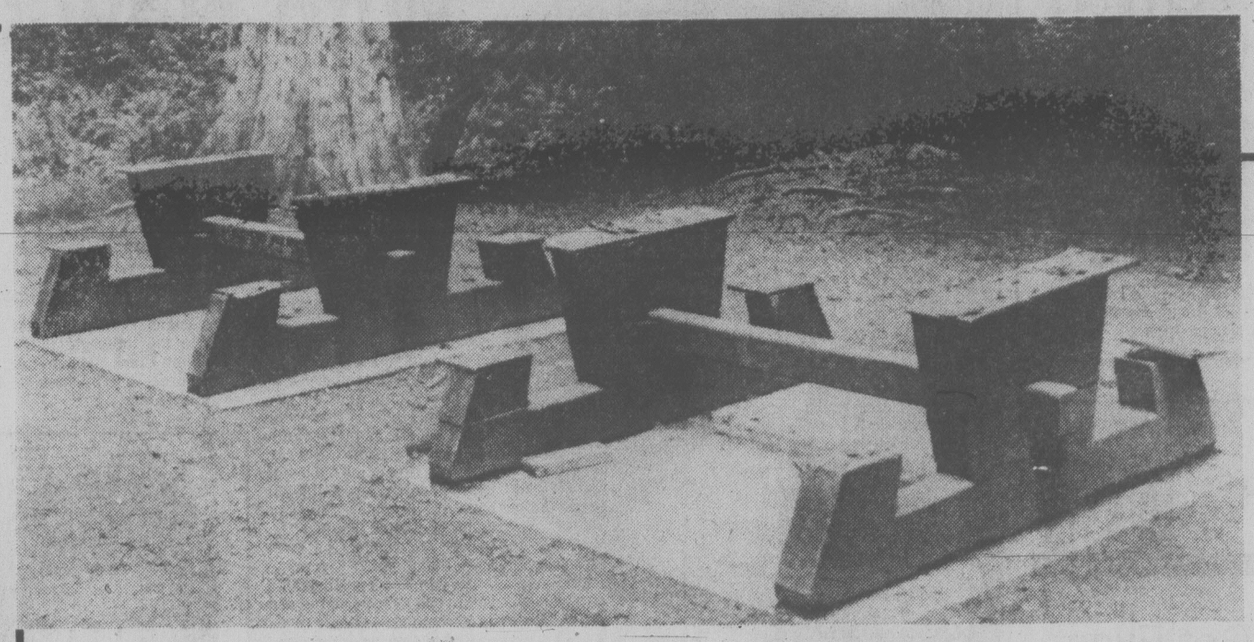
He said other public sector unions in the Greater Victoria area have settled for four per cent and Saanich firemen are only entitled to that amount in their 1978 contract, still to be negotiated.

If the city was to grant the six-per-cent increase for this year, the salary of a first-class firefighter would go to $1,575 a month, a 49.3 per cent increase from what it was in 1974. The cost of living only went up 42 per cent in that period.

Hansen countered by pointing out that Anshelm was including five salary increases in that comparison but inflation rate increases for only four years.

He also disagreed with the point about the Saanich firemen, saying they are entitled to 5.5 per cent this year.

As for the four-per-cent increase Anshelm claims the other unions got, Hansen said the Canadian Union of Public Employees settled for a cost-of-living clause in their agreement and that was only scrapped because of changes at the federal level.



Picnic tables denuded of tops and benches stand as stark evidence of vandalism at John Dean Park

Yahoos Creating Crisis in the Park

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Consider the picnic table, the big, solid kind which is a standard feature of B.C. provincial parks.

It's valued at about $200 and it's both attractive and useful. Built of prime cedar, with table-top planks a hefty three and a half inches thick, and bolted to a concrete base, it's also seemingly indestructible.

One would think that aside from a coat of varnish now and then, such a table might last for centuries with little or no maintenance.

And so it probably would — if only the amateur demolition crews would leave it alone.

For these yahoos, the picnic table represents nothing more than a challenge to muscle and determination.

Equipped with crowbars, machetes, chainsaws, axes and other handy tools, they systematically destroy, mutilate and burn scores every year.

They also get their kicks by felling trees, tearing down signs, wrenching doors off campsite buildings, smashing toilets and numerous other acts of vandalism.

Most of the havoc occurs in the early spring, before gatehouse control and the presence of campers act as a deterrent, and the ever-worsening problem is particularly prevalent in parks close to urban centres.

"As far as I'm concerned it's getting to crisis proportions," a frustrated parks branch official told the Times this week.

"I don't have enough people to put things back together and the morale of my parks crew is deteriorating," said Malahat district superintendent Don Carruthers.

"They put a lot of pride into their work, getting the parks into first-class shape, only to see everything wiped out by this kind of senseless destruction."

Carruthers is responsible for 20 parks in the southern part of Vancouver Island between Duncan and Victoria, including the lower Gulf Islands.

Last year his district's bill just for repairing the damage caused was more than $10,000, about one-third of the figure for the whole province-wide parks system.

But that represents only the tip of the financial iceberg because it doesn't include travel time, vehicle operation and other costs.

For example, patrol and security staff (who often combine ticket collecting, routine maintenance and similar duties) required a salary bill for all parks last year of around $200,000.

Carruthers said in this region the vandals tend to select as their main targets about half a dozen parks including Goldstream, Bamberton, Montague Harbor (on Galiano Island) and Prior Centennial Park (on North Pender).

The Saanich Peninsula's John Dean Park "is getting hit at least once a month — they've just taken it apart again," he added.

Ray Lowrey, chief of operations for the parks branch, says the culprits are mostly teen-agers primed with beer or drugs. Some are as young as 13 or 14.

The schools' spring break and the long Easter weekend are the worst times, he adds, when gangs of youngsters descend on the parks for all-night drinking and wrecking sessions.

"We end up being baby sitters," complains Carruthers. "People come and dump their kids off, expecting us to keep an eye on them. And if the kids get into trouble, their parents are nowhere to be found."

But Lowrey and Carruthers agree the causes of the problem are far more complex than simple parental neglect, rooted as they are in the basic ills of our present society.

They note that the parks branch tries to stress prevention, with a program in which staff members visit schools to talk to Grade 5 and 6 students about B.C.'s flora and fauna and urge respect for our natural environment.

However, they are realistic enough not to expect such a program to produce any short-term solutions to the vandalism scourge, which in the last decade has infected provincial and state parks and campsites throughout North America.

When they recall that the parks branch had no patrol staff before 1970, it's a surprising reminder of how recent the problem is. Now, there are about 30 on Vancouver Island alone.

The strength is nowhere near adequate but Lowrey points out that a patrolman earns $1,200 a month and budget restrictions make more hirings an impossible dream.

Two patrolmen are assigned to each of the local trouble spots, temporary reinforcements are moved in for the peak weekends and the branch praises the "fantastic" job done by the RCMP.

But still the vandals seem to escape largely undetected, confining their activities to hours when no one else is likely to be around.

As Lowrey observed: "They don't like witnesses to their vandalism."

Occasionally, though, the harassed parks officials taste sweet revenge.

With some relish, Lowrey relates the anecdote of the mountain goat, a big wooden figure carved by staff at the branch's Langford workshop.

On a stonework base it towers above the Jasper-Prince George highway on the Alberta-B.C. border, where the goats abound.

A chainsaw-wielding type scaled the 20-foot structure one night and neatly decapitated it.

A month or so later he evidently tried the same thing — unaware that the new goat's wooden exterior now concealed a long reinforcing metal rod. He was able to make a gash in the neck, but nothing more.

The circumstances surrounding the discovery, and the effect on the guy holding the chainsaw, aren't known. But parks officials savour the moment in their imagination.

Fired RJH Director Plans Legal Action

William Chaster, fired Thursday as Royal Jubilee's director of financial services, met with his lawyer today to plan legal action against the hospital.

He was dismissed, Chaster claims, because he wanted to give complete information on the hospital's operation to its managing board.

Chaster, an accountant and management analyist, says he was given six weeks' severance pay after being called in from sick leave and fired.

For the past two years, he said, he has been working on an advanced computer system for the hospital.

Chaster claims the system, if implemented, will greatly improve the hospital's administration which he said is inefficient and outdated.

"I had hoped to bring this hospital, which is a taxpayer's place, out of the 1950s and into the 1970s," he said.

"I think I can say without boasting that I have been in the forefront in the design and implementation of this system."

Chaster said he had asked board members at a meeting of the hospital's finance committee about four weeks ago what kind of information they would like from the computer system.

"I was subsequently roundly castigated by the administration for doing this. I was told the board should only be told what the administration thinks it should be told," he said.

Chaster said he was told he was unable to get along with the hospital's managing group and had exceeded his authority. He denied both allegations.

"My authority has never been specified and I have been doing it for the past two years."

He said he will run for the hospital's board of directors at the next meeting.

"If I sit on the board they had better watch out because I know too much."

RJH executive director Dr. A. C. Pickles said today he understands Chaster is taking the matter to court.

"I gather from this morning's paper that Mr. Chaster plans legal action against the hospital so it is in the courts that the facts should and will emerge."

Bomb Scare

Students and staff at Colquitz Junior High School, 320 Brunswick, were evacuated from the building Thursday afternoon following a bomb threat.

A Saanich police spokesman said a person phoned at 2:28 p.m. to say a bomb would go off within 15 minutes.

A search of the school was carried out but nothing extraordinary was found.

It was the second bomb threat of the day in the Victoria area.

The 9 a.m. sailing of the Queen of Esquimalt out of Tsawwassen was cancelled after two elderly bus passengers thought they overheard a couple of youths talk about planting a bomb in the ship's engine room.

RCMP bomb squad members searched the ship but failed to come up with a bomb.

15% Tourist Hike Due

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria is heading for a record tourist season, an increase of at least 15 per cent over last year, Visitors Information Centre president Ted Balderson said today.

He said an estimate by Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy that the increase could be 25 per cent "seems a little optimistic."

However, a 15 per cent increase is a very realistic forecast, based on the tourist flow in the first four months, he said.

"It is beginning to look very good. The year began a little slowly but everyone is having a good April. The tourists are starting to arrive."

The influx should reach a peak in July with the arrival of the tall ships and August will be busy as well, especially with the overflow from Seattle where the King Tut treasures are on display all summer.

He said the Tut display will bring exceptionally large crowds to Washington State and many will come over to Victoria during the summer.

"There is no doubt the number of tourists here will increase 15 per cent. That is a realistic goal."

The Visitors Information Centre will spend $120,000 on external promotion this year to attract tourists here.

This is up from $100,000 in 1977, the first year of the external advertising program.

Balderson said the budget for 1979 is tentatively set at $200,000 for external promotion.

"That is the kind of money we need to do a really first-class job. We want to place Victoria displays in the windows of California travel agents and it has to be a first-class presentation. You can put in a third-class display and the people will just walk on by."

This year the budget is being used to advertise Victoria and to prepare two brochures, one to send to those writing Victoria for tourist information and the other to hand out to visitors when they arrive.

BALDERSON
. . . April good

The one being mailed out of town will stress the importance of staying several days in Victoria, not just a single afternoon.

Balderson said the Causeway tourist bureau is busy generating publicity in travel magazines and general newspapers, including recent articles in the Toronto press.

In additon there are paid advertisements in west coast magazines.

"These articles and advertisements, which are already appearing, will produce written enquiries and that's what the new brochures are for. The whole program is starting to come together."

The accent is on tourists rather than conventions because local facilities are not large enough to handle large meetings.

To raise funds for next year's promotions, the Visitors Information Centre will begin selling Victoria trade dollars, starting May 15. This year's goal is to surpass last year's sale of $110,000.

The Causeway bureau also got a grant of $24,000 from the city, down from $28,000 last year but adequate because the city also gave $10,000 to the Vancouver Island Publicity Bureau and the VIC has access to some of that funding through joint promotions.

RUMORS PUT TANKS ON BAMBERTON SITE

Rumors that Victoria's oil tank farm might be shifted to the Bamberton cement factory site on Saanich Inlet has started a flurry of activity among peninsula residents.

Central Saanich Ratepayers Association president George Lamont said today a formal resolution proposing that Saanich Inlet be declared a marine park will be brought forward at a meeting May 10.

Lamont said the organization has heard of no definite plans for the Bamberton site, which is owned by Genstar Ltd., but because the cement factory is facing an imminent phase-out, concern over future use of the location is growing.

"I've heard that the (Inner Harbor) tank farm might be moved there . . . Of course we've got to have tank farms — the Island's got to have oil brought in — but not in a sensitive place like that."

Capital Regional District public works committee chairman Charlie Perkins said that there has been some talk of moving the tank farm to Saanich Inlet, but so far it has been just that — talk.

Removal of the tank farm is called for in provincial and regional Inner Harbor beautification plans.

Saanich Inlet resident, biologist and former fishing guide Jim Gilbert says he has heard that the Bamberton location might be used as a tank farm site or for other industrial purposes.

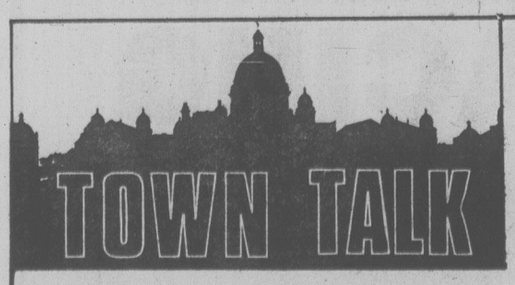
"Genstar may soon be moving out of Bamberton and there are rumors circulating," said Gilbert. "There's no way, shape or form that we want tankers running into the Inlet."

Central Saanich recently rejected Genstar's proposals for a major housing development on Todd Inlet.

Gilbert said that Saanich Inlet was declared a sports fishing reserve 40 years ago and marine park designation would merely be an extension of that.

Howard Schesser of the Cowichan Valley Regional District's public works and planning department said no proposals for future use of the Bamberton site have come to his office.

Bamberton, which is immediately across the Inlet from Brentwood Bay, falls within the CVRD's jurisdiction.



When municipal politicians weary of the criticism and carping often directed at them from taxpayers, businessmen, the press, where do they recharge their batteries?

Service club luncheons seem to be the place. Victoria mayor Mike Young and Saanich chief magistrate Mel Couvelier were guests at the last Rotary club meeting in the city.

The club's bulletin also says Ald. Murray Glazier was one of the "galaxy of VIPs at the head table." He spoke briefly, then was followed by Young "who with humor and dexterity" introduced Couvelier.

Saanich's mayor, the Rotarians tell us, "despite the short time in the mayor's chair, displayed amazing knowledge of his municipality . . . one could not help but be impressed with his sincerity and dedication."

Next week, when Rotarians are in a less critical mood . . .

The spicy East Indian cuisine of Victoria's Shah Jahan Restaurant continues to win national acclaim.

For the fourth straight year, the Fort Street restaurant's menu has been judged exceptional and received a coveted five-star rating in the "other nationalities" category of the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association.

The association's plaque was awarded during its Host Ex '78 show in Toronto.

Victoria should have an anti-smoking bylaw to stop people from puffing in public places, according to the United Non-Smokers Society of Richmond. In a letter to city hall the society has offered to help out in drafting just such a bylaw to control "indoor air pollution by smokers."

The organization argues that any steps taken to discourage smoking will benefit everyone.

PRO BASEBALL BACK IN TOWN?

The latest and perhaps last chapter in this year's on-and-off speculation about Victoria receiving a professional baseball franchise was to unfold this afternoon.

A press conference had been called for this afternoon at which time it is expected that a franchise in the Class "A" Northwest League will be unveiled by a group headed by Don Rogelstad of Burnaby and Jim Chapman of Vancouver.

Bob Bragan, a former major league manager, and Bob Freitas, a former manager with the defunct Vancouver Mounties, are also expected to be in attendance.

A previous attempt to land a team here failed earlier this year when Van Schley of Los Angeles decided the rent for Royal Athletic Park was too high.

A Way To Get Even For Canuck Arrogance

It is time to start getting even with Vancouver Canucks.

They have violated their parole and mugged 2,339 people. Faced by someone with a rap sheet like that, St. Francis of Assisi would reach for a club.

They are beyond forgiveness, beyond rehabilitation. They deserve only solitary. To get one customer to the Coliseum next season they should have to break out and take hostages.

After eight years of painting themselves into corners, they've decided to do it to the customers with car lot sales pitch and minor league con. "Step right up, ladies and gentlemen: Which shell is the pea under? Please note that at no time do my fingers leave my hands."

On April 5 the Canucks announced that the casual fan — i.e., the one without the season ticket — would have to pay from $1.50 to $2 more per ticket to see individual games.

In justifying the hike they pointed out that there would be no increase in season ticket prices. They were quite specific on that: "The cost for season tickets will remain the same for the fourth straight year," general manager Jake Milford said.

And they have kept their word. There will be no price increase for season tickets. Instead, they will paint the first five rows of $8 blue seats red. They will then be in the red ticket range, which is $10 per ticket.

But there is no change in the season ticket price. They are changing only the number of seats in the reds and blues.

It is an interesting exercise in semantics. For the price of a few cans of red paint they take in an additional $201,154, and by their own curious lights they come out of it with honor intact.

★ ★ ★

My old daddy had a saying that covers stickhandling like that.

"Son," he said, "a horse apple with icing on it may look tasty as hell. But when you bite into it, it's still a horse apple."

Do not pin this on Milford or the players, who have troubles of their own. This is an executive decision, and up there where the decisions are made they're likely arrogant enough to think they can get away with it.

I don't believe they should.

There is a way — an ethical, legal and delicious way to nail them right in the old protector. Were I one of the 2,339 customers in those five rows of blue seats who will learn in Monday's mail that they now must pay $2 more per game per seat, this is what I would do:

I would phone the people I know who sit around me, and ask them to phone those who sit around them. With the pyramid effect and a little bit of patience — I am infinitely patient when getting even — there should be no problem in recruiting most of them.

I would then form The 2,339 Club.

The club would be divided into convivial groups of 15 or 20. There would be no dues, no membership cards, no promises broken because none would be made.

We would hold 43 meetings per year — one on each night the Canucks played a home game. We would gather in our little groups at the restaurants or pubs of our choice, there to take part in the club's only two rituals.

First, we would each throw into a pot the $10 we would have spent to sit in one of those shiny new red seats.

The money would then be used to purchase massive amounts of pizza or Chinese food and beer.

On nights when the Canadiens or Boston or Philadelphia were in town we might place a radio at the centre of each table and listen to Jim Robson's play-byplay. Otherwise we would engage in pleasant talk about things that we found interesting — pausing each hour to hold the Worst Canuck Play I've Ever Seen contest.

New friends would be made. Romances could blossom. The art of conversation could well be revived. Inside of one or two sessions some of us could stop shaking over the horrors of '77.

★ ★ ★

And when the last beer was downed, the last anchovie swallowed, we would line up at pay telephones, all clutching one dime and one telephone number.

One by one we would dial that number. And when the president of the Vancouver Canucks answered — Bill Hughes or whoever he may be — we would recite The 2,339 Club slogan:

"Having a wonderful time. Glad you're not here."

You see, the people who run this hockey club seem to have forgotten something.

When you buy a car you are allowed to kick the tires and take a test drive. When you go to a movie or play you are gambling in a sense — but at least you know who the actors are and what level of performance you might reasonably expect.

Only in sport, and nowhere more than in hockey, are you asked — no, told — to pay large chunks of money in advance without knowing who you're paying to see or even who will be coaching whatever sort of team you have.

And now they have the colossal arrogance to cover a season like that with a bucket of paint — and gouge the paying customer in the process.

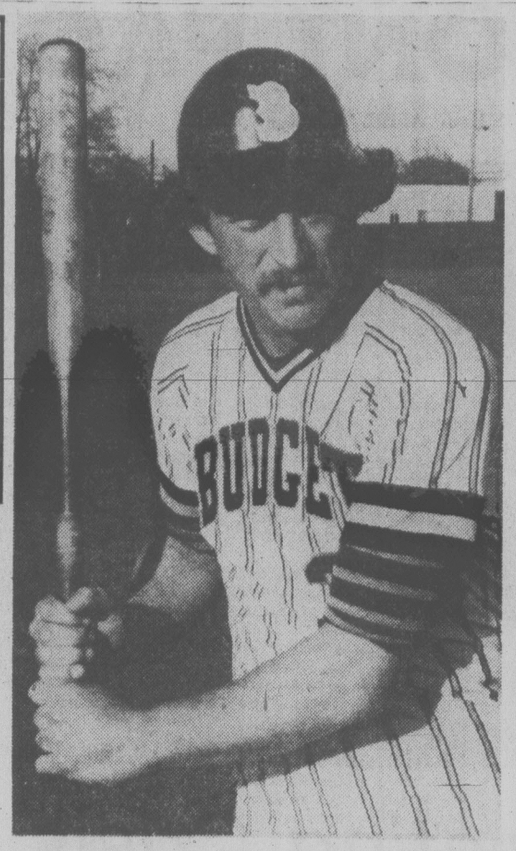
It shows no originality. They've never been accused of that.

Toronto did it in the past, and Montreal. It was a gouge then, too, but there was a subtle difference. They had hockey teams.

The more I think of it, the more there is a need for The 2,339 Club. It would serve two purposes.

A lot of people would discover that they can get along quite nicely without mediocre to bad hockey.

And it would bring this hockey club to its knees. The view might be humbling.



NEW LOOK for new season is displayed by catcher Bob Burrows, wearing new uniform of Victoria Budgets. Former Bates, but still Canadian champions, senior "A" men's softball team opens 1978 campaign at Royal Athletic Park with four-game exhibition series against Port Alberni. Saturday doubleheader starts at 7, Sunday's at 1 p.m.

Maple Leafs Brimming With New Confidence

TORONTO (CP) — As far as Dave (Tiger) Williams is concerned, Toronto Maple Leafs are headed for a meeting with Montreal Canadiens in the National Hockey League semi-final playoffs.

"You better get to Montreal ahead of time to get a good seat," Williams advised reporters Thursday night after the Leafs outplayed New York Islanders 5-2 to even their best-of-seven quarter-final playoff at 3-3.

Williams was referring to the Leafs opponent in the semi-finals if they can beat the Islanders in the seventh and deciding game Saturday night at Uniondale, N.Y. If the Islanders triumph, they'll open their series Tuesday night in Boston against the Bruins while Montreal will meet Philadelphia Flyers.

The game was decided long before the first period ended as Toronto scored four quick goals—two on power plays—by 12:53 of the opening session. From then on both clubs coasted. However, the game took over three hours to complete because of numerous fouls and chippy play on both sides.

The officiating, which has been a sore point in every game so far, didn't really concern Williams.

"This is the only time of year it can make or break a game," he said. "But, Darryl Sittler doesn't have a pefect shot every time either."

Referee Dave Newell handed out 86 minutes in penalties—40 minutes to Toronto and 46 to New York—as any foray into the corners seemed to result in at least minor penalties to the players involved.

"We won the game on pure skill," Williams joked about the penalty-filled contest. "Fisticuffs are always going to happen. We're just 19 guys committed to playing our way."

Toronto wasted little time in taking the play to the Islanders and jumped to a 1-0 on a goal by Darryl Sittler at 2:49 of the first period before Jack Valiquette, Lanny McDonald and Stan Weir followed to open a commanding 4-0 lead.

At that point, Islanders goaltender Glenn Resch was pulled in favor of Billy Smith. Resch, however, was not at fault on any of the first four goals but was lifted to give Smith—making his first playoff appearance this season—some much-needed ice time.

New York coach Al Arbour said he inserted Smith for that reason but wouldn't state who he intended to start in the decisive seventh game.

Pat Boutette gave the Leafs a 5-0 lead in the second period when he outskated New York defenceman Pat Price and broke in alone before beating Smith with a wrist shot at 4:36.

The Islanders then got two goals in the lethargic third period—by Clark Gillies and Bob Bourne—but by then it was far too late.

To make things worse for New York, rookie Mike Bossy suffered a neck sprain when he was checked into the boards during the second period and had to be carried from the ice on a stretcher. After x-rays at hospital, however, Bossy was released and was in the Islanders dressing room after the game.

"If it was the seventh game, I would've been back," Bossy said, adding he would be back in the lineup for Saturday night's game.

Coach Roger Neilson is as optimistic as Williams about a Toronto victory on Long Island.

"We're due for a win in New York," the rookie coach said. "We've got to play it tough in the first period—we've got to come out hitting."

Both teams have won only on home ice, although Toronto has forced two overtimes in New York, losing both games two and five in the first sudden-death period.

DON HORWOOD
. . . to Edmonton

HORWOOD LEAVING WITH NO PROMISES

Oak Bay Bays will have a new high school boys' basketball coach next season.

Don Horwood, 31, will leave for Edmonton in late August to seek a master's degree in sports psychology at the University of Alberta.

Horwood, who will be gone about a year, has applied for a leave-of-absence from the school board. But if the leave is granted and despite his personal preferences, there's no guarantee he'll be able to return to Oak Bay.

"There's nowhere I'd rather go than Oak Bay," he said today. "It's been a supurb school."

Under Horwood's guidance, Bays have claimed the Vancouver Island title five straight times and six times in the past seven years. During the past six years, Bays have taken the provncial championship three times, finished second twice and fourth once.

'Superstars' Slip Against Finland

PRAGUE (CP) — When the Finnish national team trooped into its dressing room trailing Canada 4-1 at the end of the first period of their world hockey championship game their coach had a few words for them.

"Now you've had a good look at the superstars from the other side of the Atlantic," said Kalevi Numinen, "it's time you stopped looking and started playing."

Not only did the Finns start playing, the Canadians promptly stopped looking like superstars and were so clearly outclassed in the final two periods that they came away with a surprise 6-4 loss in their first game of the tournament on Thursday.

It was Canada's first loss to Finland since the 1968 Winter Olympics Game, and although there are still six games to play in the eight-nation preliminary round-robin it will hurt Canada's chances of winning the gold medal.

Head coach Harry Howell remained confident that his team would finish in the top four and qualify for the championship round-robin, presumably against defending champion Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union and Sweden.

But since points from both the preliminary and final rounds are counted in the over-all standings, any defeat is a serious setback.

To be fair in assessing the loss, the fact is that the Canadians were seriously hampered by penalties. They took nine to two and both times the Finns went off they took a Canadian with them.

The result was that when the Finns scored three unanswered goals in the second period to tie the score 4-4 and then added a pair in the third period, the Canadians found themselves playing one or two men short every time they tried to regroup.

Three of the Finnish goals, including the winner at 9:43 of the third period by Juhani Tamminen, were scored on power plays.

"Thats the whole story," said Marcel Dionne, the Los Angeles Kings centre who was chosen team captain on the eve of the game. "If you score that many power-play goals you deserve to win and they did."

Dionne, who assisted on the first Canadian goal by Jean Pronovost at the 37-second mark of the first period, insisted the club did not let up after taking the big lead. But Howell saw it differently.

"I have to give the Finns a great deal of credit because in the second and third periods they came back very, very strongly, especially the second. Many teams losing 4-1 could have just folded their tents and said the game was over.

"Unfortunately our club thought the game was over and the Finns just kept coming back at us. And when we discovered we were in trouble we couldn't get it back. They were in control of the game and we weren't getting any chances."

Howell added that he was certain the Canadians had learned a lesson. "You have to play 60 minutes all the time regardless of how highly rated or poor the opposition is supposed to be. And I do think we'll win enough games to make the top four.

That's not an unreasonable assumption.

Lee Worried About Player

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Lee Trevino took a long look over his shoulder at his friend Gary Player, four shots back going into today's second round of the $200,000 New Orleans Open golf tournament.

"He's gonna be a tough man to beat," Trevino said. "He is the perfect example of determination. He never gives up.

"A lot of us out here, we start playing bad and we're Hollywooding it, back-handing putts and just trying to finish and get off the golf course and go home. And there's little Gary out there grinding away, trying to hole it from the fairway for a 12.

"He never quits on you, no matter what.

"He just keeps trying, just keeps coming at you. He's tough."

Trevino took advantage of ideal playing conditions and a manicured 7,080-yard Lakewood Country Club course to fire a spectacular, seven-under-par 65 that put him a single shot in front of the field and four ahead of Player.

The little South African didn't make a bogey on his way to a 69. "I'm quite satisfied, " he said. "I didn't hole as many putts as I have been lately, but I'm not complaining. It was a nice round of golf."

Player came into this event with three consecutive comebacks under his belt and seeking to become only the third man in PGA Tour history to win four consecutive tournaments.

Trevino's 35-foot birdie putt on the final hole lifted him a single stroke ahead of soft-spoken Mark Hayes, who would have had a share of the top spot but for a three-putt bogey on the 18th that left him with a 66.

Tied at 67 were Ray Floyd, Bob E. Smith and Homero Blancas, who one-putted 11 times.

Jim Nelford of Burnaby was nine strokes off the pace with a 37-37—74, while George Knudson of Toronto had a 35-40—75.

Bruins Go Two Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — New Westminster Bruins defeated Billings Bighorns 4-0 Thursday before 7,964 fans to take a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven Western Canada Hockey League final series.

The next three games in the series are in Billings, starting Saturday.

The Bruins took a 2-0 lead in the second period on goals by John Paul Kelly and Jim Dobson. Kent Reardon and Stan Smyl, with goals one minute and 20 seconds apart late in the game, completed the Bruins scoring.

Richard Martens made 35 saves for his shutout, including 16 in the second period of the cleanly-played game in which there were only six penalties, one of them a double minor.

Tim Tomlison stopped 42 in the Billings net.

Good penalty killing helped the Bruins. Kelly, who scored the winning goal early in the second period, was given three minor penalties in the first period but Billings failed to capitalize.

Billings coach Dave King said after the game that he was disappointed in his team's inability to muster an attack against the Bruins.

"They shut down our big line and the rest of the guys seemed over-anxious and messed up what few good opportunities we had to score."

Free-Running Dogs Take Toll of Wildlife

Some rambling notes along the trail:

Do you know the whereabouts of your dog at all times? . . . Either someone didn't Sunday or, worse still, didn't care . . . Gary Vaughan called up to report that two dogs, one a part-Collie and the other a German Shepherd, ran down and killed a doe near Stone House on Finlayson Arm . . . Surprisingly enough, the Collie cross appeared to be the leader . . . The Shepherd was feeding on the carcass when Vaughan, who fishes out of Hall's, made the return sweep on his trolling pattern about two hours later . . . Campers frequent the area during the summer and an accident involving a child is possible . . . Fawning time is also near and pregnant does make easy prey . . . Dog owners should note that their pets can be destroyed if they're running game.

★ ★ ★

How sharp are your fishing hooks? . . . If you can drag a hook point down over your fingernail without snagging, its too dull . . . A sharp hook will catch and leave a scratch . . . It's been proven that it takes three to four times as much force to sink the barb of a dull hook as it does a properly sharpened one . . . The consequences of not checking new hooks for sharpness or forgetting to sharpen them during use are counted in the number of fish struck but not landed . . . Always sharpen a hook from the barb toward the point with two flat beveled sides to form a triangle with the bottom as a base when viewed in cross-section . . . The very tip of the point should be formed into a horizontal oval.

★ ★ ★

Sportsmen in British Columbia should keep close watch on the activities of organized guides in this province . . . It seems the guides, at a recent convention in Burns Lake, asked for absolute security of tenure within their guiding areas . . . This would mean resident sportsmen would probably have to obtain some form of permit in order to hunt in the area . . . Not that the government is likely to grant such a request . . . Or would it?

★ ★ ★

Anyone venturing off the beaten track in B.C. should pick up a copy of the new fish and wildlife brochure Bear and Cougar Safety Facts . . . It contains sound advice on what precautions you can take to avoid conflict with these animals . . . Or, if an attack occurs, it even has some tips on how to lessen the damage . . . As "civilization" spreads and more people take up outdoor activities, these potential confrontations are bound to increase . . . So it might be a good idea to arm yourself with a little knowledge.

★ ★ ★

Chinooks to 24 pounds continue to provide excellent salmon fishing in waters between Pedder Bay and Sooke . . . Best spots have been Christopher Point, The Race, Bedford Island, Beechey Head and Secretary Island . . . Most of the action has been on deeply-trolled bait or hootchie-type lures . . . Other good spots for chinooks have been Coal Island off Sidney, McCurdy Point, Bamberton, Tod Inlet, Stone House and Goldstream Island . . . Blues are abundant in a number of spots . . . Trout fishing should start to get hot pretty soon in some of the larger lakes on Vancouver Island . . . The top choices right now might be Cowichan, Nahmint, Great Central, Sproat, Comox and Upper Campbell lakes.

"Take that back and cook it! It's already eaten half of the french fries."

Ballesteros Leading

MADRID (AP) — Spaniard Severino Ballesteros retained his lead in the 72-hole Madrid Open golf tournament Thursday, firing a par-72 over the Puerta de Hierro layout and a two-round score of 138—six under par.

Huber Clark of Britain was alone in second at 140 after a second-round 70 in the $36,000 tournament. He was two strokes better than Briton Peter Townsend, who matched his opening round 71.

Two more Spaniards shared fourth place at 143—Valentin Barios and Jose Avelino Cobo. Another shot off the pace were Jose Maria Canizares of Spain, Al Charnley of Britain and Hugh Baiocchi of South Africa.

WITH TIGERS IN SEATTLE

Bird's Wing Still Sore

Times News Services

Pitcher Mark (The Bird) Fidrych of Detroit Tigers gave up in disgust Thursday after less than five minutes of trying to throw.

One of the team's radio broadcasters, Paul Carey, says Fidrych threw softly to catcher Lance Parrish, then "threw his glove down in disgust" as the pain in his arm persisted during the workout in Seattle's Kingdome.

Fidrych, the team's No. 1 pitcher, was yanked from an American League baseball game April 17 when the shoulder stiffened up.

He was cancelled as last Saturday's starter because of the trouble and received a cortisone shot Sunday.

He is travelling with the club but it's uncertain when he will try to pitch again. He is 2-0 on the season.

Fidrych missed the start of last season because off a knee injury, then posted a 6-4 record before tendonitis in the right shoulder sidelined him for the year.

Fidrych says his latest problem "feels the same" as the tendonitis, but manager Ralph Houk says the pain developed differently than last year.

The Tigers are in Seattle and will open a series with the Mariners tonight.

Meanwhile, in action Thursday, Frank Tanana of California Angels fired a four-hitter to beat Seattle 5-1 and raise his record to 5-0.

Elsewhere in the American, right-hander Gary Serum, making his first major league start, pitched a five-hitter and struck out six as Minnesota Twins snapped Oakland A's eight-game winning streak with a 6-1 victory.

The decision also ended Minnesota's nine-game losing streak.

Serum gave up a home run to Wayne Gross leading off the third for Oakland's only run while winning his second game of the season against no losses.

Mike Hargrove hit his third home run in as many games and Jon Matlack and Len Barker combined on a nine-hitter as Texas Rangers beat Cleveland Indians 3-1.

Willie Upshaw hit a two-out, two-run double in the ninth inning as Toronto Blue Jays rallied for an 8-7 victory over Kansas City Royals.

In the only National League game, left-hander Vida Blue scattered seven hits and Willie McCovey drove in four runs with a three-run double and a solo homer, giving San Francisco Giants a 5-3 victory over Atlanta Braves.

Tag-Team Bout Highlights Card

Salvador Martino, Igor Volkoff and John Quinn defeated The Outlaw, Wild Don Wayt and The Avenger in the feature tag-team bout of a professional wrestling card Thursday night at Memorial Arena.

In other bouts, Jake Roberts outgrappled Sandor Novack, Guy Mitchell outmanoeuvered The General and Mike Hammer and Bob Boucher fought to a draw.

Whitewater Excitement On the Cowichan River

There will be plenty of excitement on the Cowichan River this weekend when some of the best kayakers and canoeists in the Pacific Northwest compete in the fourth annual Cowichan spring slalom and downriver race and the British Columbia provincial championships.

Gord Price of the Victoria Whitewater Club expects more than 50 paddlers will be competing, many of them coming from Vancouver and Seattle.

Those competing in the provincial championships will have their eye on winning a place in the North America Cup trials.

The Marie Canyon will be the site for the downriver races on Saturday. The closed canoe and kayak race will start at 11 a.m. For the first time there is an official C2 Open (Canadian canoe) race which will begin at 1 p.m. This event is expected to draw many local Indian crews.

The banks of the river are expected to be crowded with spectators on Sunday when the slalom race begins at 11 a.m. The race is one of two trials to set team places for the North America Cup — a set of three competitions on the west coast, to be held in July to determine the best racer on the continent.

A new innovation this year will be a freestyle event, to be held in the late afternoon on Saturday. This should be a real crowd-pleaser with competitors being able to try out various manoeuvres.

Experienced paddlers of the Victoria Canoe Club will also head for the Cowichan River on Sunday, leaving Goldstream Park about 10 a.m. Those taking part should phone either Fred Potter at 652-2446 or Bob Cain at 595-1115.

If the water levels are not suitable they'll run the upper reaches of the river. Those inclined will settle for Cowichan Lake. Don't forget to take your lunch and camera along.

Water space will be at a premium in Cadboro Bay on Saturday when the Royal Victoria Yacht Club holds its annual sailpast.

Commodore John Ciceri will take the salute aboard his Catalina 27 Volare, accompanied by the club's honorary commodore Ned Ashe.

With signal flags and pennants flying, power boats will go by first, led by rear-commodore Bob Smith in Scot Free. Then it will be the sail boats turn, led by vice-commodore Frank Rhodes in Summerwine.

A flag-raising ceremony will be held at 1:30 p.m., followed by the sail past an hour later.

The first big race of the season, the New Dunganess Race, takes place Sunday. The 38.7-miler will begin at 10 a.m. off Harling Point at Ross Bay.

★ ★ ★

The club's Laser sailors have finished their Saturday afternoon series. Barry Wright, Doug Gray and Charles Simpson topped the fleet in the first of last Saturday's races. The second time around it was Doug, Charles and Dave Teece. In the last race the top three were Barry, Dave and Charles.

Wednesday night series racing for the club's keel boats and dinghies begins this Wedesday. Races get under way at 6:30 p.m.

★ ★ ★

The Canoe Bay Sailing Club will hold its 16-mile Russell Island Race on Sunday. The start is set for 9:30 a.m. in the vicinity of the government wharf at Sidney.

Forty-four competitors took part in the club's fourth annual invitational single-handed race on Saturday with 15 knot winds making an exciting finish.

Paul Longridge in Saga won the race for the second consecutive year. Next came Alan Dickinson's Viking, Soren Isbrand's Danish Pastry, John Barker's Interlude, Grant Mebs' Piute Logic, Daryl Foster's Tzonqua, Bill Hingley's Quintango, Ed Haines' Lotte, Rory Morahan's Starwagon and Charles Fields' Yola.

★ ★ ★

In Esquimalt Harbor, centeboard sailors of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will have series racing again on Sunday. The first gun goes at 10 a.m.

With the weather warming up, thoughts of summer cruising are uppermost in most boaters' minds. Those thinking of visiting Desolation Sound will be interested to hear that the second edition of Small Craft Guide, Volume 2, is now available at chart dealers and the Institute of Ocean Sciences.

The new edition includes Prideaux Harbor and the southern end of Desolation Sound and is priced at $4 at the institute. The address is P.O. Box 6000, 9680 West Saanich Road, V8L 4B2.

MERRITT CAPTURES OPENER

MERRITT (CP) — Merritt Centennials edged Prince Albert Raiders 6-5 Thursday before 1,300 fans to take a 1-0 lead in their best-of-seven Western Centennial Cup final for tier two junior hockey clubs.

Ken Stroud led the Centennials with two goals, while singles were added by Randy Will, Blake Stephens, Eddie Beers and Glen Johnson.

Prince Albert got two goals from Tim Mostowich and the others from Roy Roedger, Glen White and Eric Ponath.

The Centennials were given 12 of 23 minor penalties and each team picked up two five-minute fighting majors. Four of Prince Albert's five goals were scored on power plays.

Gretzky Happy Now

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — Wayne Gretzky, the high-scoring star with Sault Ste. Marie Greyhounds, says he probably will be back with the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League team next season.

Gretzky, commenting on a statement by his agent Gus Badali that he would turn pro if the World Hockey Association holds an under-age draft, said today, "chances are very good I'll play here next year."

The 17-year-old centre said "I want to get my Grade 12 and I talked it over with my parents just last weekend."

Three weeks ago Gretzky said he was disenchanted with Greyhounds and that his education suffered here this past season.

"I like it here and I like Paul's (Paul Theriault, Greyhounds coach) system and I'm not unhappy playing hockey here," he said.

Gretzky added, however, that "there are so many ifs involved."

Badali said Gretzky wants to turn pro and would pass up his remaining three years of junior elegibility if the WHA drafts under-age juniors this summer.

The present junior draft age in the National Hockey League and the WHA is 20.

Howard Baldwin, president of the WHA, has declined to say whether such a draft is being considered.

The Globe and Mail quoted an unidentified WHA executive as saying the league "would almost certainly" be drafting under-age players.

UVic Seeking Public Aid

University of Victoria, in the midst of exploring ways to become one of the first national sports development centres, is going public.

A committee will explore the methods of getting community support for the necessary funding.

UVic president Howard E. Petch outlined the project in a speech to the Union Club this week.

"The federal government has indicated through its Green Paper on Sport that it wishes to see the universities more involved in its program of developing elite athletes.

"As a result, we've been approached by the Canadian Gymnastics Association and the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association to establish national centres in these sports at UVic on a shared-coast basis. Also, a top track and field coach is available to us now on a shared-cost basis arranged through the Canadian Track and Field Association and Sports Canada. If we are able to take up this offer UVic will be recognized as a national development centre for middle-distance runners."

Estimates for UVic's share of the operating cost for a rowing development centre would be in the vicinity of $22,750 annually with an additional bill of $27,000 for purchasing shells and oars. For gymnastics the annual operating cost would be $23,200 plus $6,000 for a floor mat and the annual share of expenses involved in setting up a track and field centre was estimated to be $16,200.

Fighting Continues In Kabul

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — More fighting was reported today in Kabul, the capital of Afghanistan, despite broadcast claims that rebel troops led by an air force commander had "eliminated" President Mohammed Daoud.

Afghanistan's borders and airports closed, and all commercial communication channels were cut. But Western diplomats in New Delhi said their embassies in Kabul reported that about 200 bodies were seen in the streets.

There was no report on the situation in the important military centres of Kandhar and Harat, and one diplomat commented: "To seize Kabul is not to seize Afghanistan. Resistance in the form of guerrilla warfare could continue for months."

The rebels led by Lt. Gen. Dagarwal Abdul Qadir launched the coup Thursday with tanks and jet fighters, ringing key government buildings and capturing the defence ministry, the diplomats said.

Fierce fighting raged through the night in sections of the city where two army divisions are based, the sources reported. By sunrise it had subsided somewhat but small-arms fire could still be heard.

Meanwhile, the air force's Soviet Su-7 fighters fired rockets down Darulaman Road in the centre of the city toward the justice ministry and the headquarters of the army central corps. The informants said the planes encountered heavy anti-aircraft fire, and one plane was shot down.

A heavy pall of smoke hung over the city of 500,000, and no civilians were seen out of doors, the sources said. Rebel troops surrounded some Western embassies and refused to permit diplomats to leave their compounds.

Diplomats in New Delhi had no concrete information on the fate of the 69-year-old president, who took over the government in a military coup in 1973, or his family. But the news announced on Radio Afghanistan today declared: "Daoud is gone forever. Daoud has been eliminated forever by the will of the people of Afghanistan."

Unconfirmed reports said the former royal palace in which the president lived had been reduced to rubble by fire from 50 tanks.

A broadcast said the new Military Revolutionary Council was abolishing the 1977 constitution.

Claiming that the council controlled all military camps and bases, the broadcast said public gatherings were banned, an 8 p.m.-to-dawn curfew had been imposed and all laws would be made by the council.

Abdul Qadir said in an earlier broadcast that "for the first time power has come into the hands of the people."

"The last remnant of imperialism and tyranny of the Mohammedzai has been put to an end," he declared.

KOREAN BOATS CLASH

SEOUL (Reuter) — South Korean patrol boats today sank a North Korean spy boat off the south coast in a brief clash which left at least three persons dead, the South Korean defence ministry reported.

The ministry's Anti-Espionage Command said two North Koreans and one from the south were killed in the 10-minute exchange of fire. Two South Koreans were wounded.

The command said the appearance of the 10-ton North Korean boat was a sign that the north might start a new campaign to send agents to the south after a lull that has lasted several months.

Carter Gas Ration Plan Ready

WASHINGTON (AP) — A standby gasoline rationing plan expected to be announced next week by the Carter administration would distribute fuel in a national emergency based on the number of cars a business or family owns, congressional sources say.

Rationing is not being advocated by the administration at this time. However, a 1975 law requires a rationing plan to be on hand in the event of a national energy emergency.

Under the proposal, the more cars an individual, family or business owns, the more coupons that could be obtained. The plan does not spell out how much gasoline would be allotted for each car, other than to say the car's fuel economy would be a factor.

Energy Department officials recently briefed Senate staff members on the plan. A summary copy of the plan was obtained by Associated Press Radio.

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger frequently has said that the administration views rationing as an unattractive option—one that would be considered only in an emergency or as a last resort.

The Carter plan differs markedly from one submitted by former president Ford in January, 1977, shortly before he left office. It would have based gasoline coupon allotments on the number of drivers licences in a family.

A memo prepared by Max Friedersdorf, director of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, questions the fairness of the Carter plan.

"If you can afford to own several cars, does that mean you should be allocated more gasoline during a shortage than someone who may be able to afford only one car?" Friedersdorf asked.

His memo also said that persons might buy old junk cars just to enable them to purchase more gasoline.

Once Carter's plan is formally submitted, Congress must act on it within 60 days. If he—or a future president—decides to activate the plan, either house of Congress has 15 days in which to disapprove it.

Through a bureaucratic quirk in the Senate, Ford's rationing plan was never formally received on Capitol Hill and the 60-day period never began. Carter withdrew the Ford plan, and the administration has been working on its own version ever since.

Under the Ford administration, 4.8 billion coupons, each entitling the bearer to five gallons of gasoline, were printed and stored at a cost of $12 million. Sources said the Carter plan would require printing new coupons at about the same cost.

WEIGH 'EM, or count 'em, assistant bank manager Bruce Hogg appears to be thinking as he scratches his head. The load of copper — 30,000 pennies all neatly wrapped — were brought into a Toronto bank by Russell Plastic (right). He exchanged the pennies for $300, which he plans to spend on a European vacation. It took him four years of scrounging to save the coppers.

Blob-Dropping Airplane Subject of U.S. Search

WASHINGTON — U.S. Federal Aviation Administration officials said Thursday they are trying to find the airplane with the leaky lavatory that is responsible for the 25-pound green blob of frozen waste that landed in Ripley, Tenn., Sunday.

What some residents of that small community thought was an unidentified flying object is evidence the FAA has not completely solved the leaky lavatory problem, despite taking the firm action of revising its handbook in 1974 after an engine was ripped off a jetliner because of a similar incident.

"This is more excitement than we've had in this little town in a long time," said Debbie Crowell, a dispatcher in the sheriff's office of Tennessee's Lauderdale County. The blob, she said, "has been taken care of. It had a nice little odor to it. We sent a three-ounce sample over to the University of Tennessee laboratory."

The blob landed outdoors, near an unused school building. The blob was first placed in a deep freeze in the sheriff's office until the phenomenon was explained by the FAA's regional office in Memphis.

"This is not supposed to happen," said the FAA's Fred Farrar. "But it's nothing new. We've had 'em crash into people's kitchens."

If there is a leak to the outside in airplane lavatory plumbing, the liquid will freeze in the sub-zero temperatures of high-altitude flying. If the leak continues, the blob grows in size until it either falls off of its own weight, is shaken off by the plane's vibration, or comes unglued as the plane descends into warmer temperatures.

The worst year for falling blobs was 1974, when 14 incidents were reported in the United States. On several occasions blobs penetrated the roofs of residences. No known personal injuries have resulted, Farrar said.

Israel Hints at New Moves

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance ended two days of talks Thursday with signs of possible Israeli movement on some aspects of the stalled Middle East peace negotiations.

Dayan told reporters he must consult Prime Minister Menachem Begin and possibly the rest of the cabinet on "clarifications" of the Israeli negotiating position. The matters in question are believed to include practical details of Begin's "self-rule" plan for the West Bank and Gaza strip, and arrangements for a form of Palestinian self-determination there after the end of a five-year interim period.

Dayan is considered to be more flexible, at least in diplomatic formulations, than Begin and at this point is the preferred U.S. negotiating partner. Dayan is to meet Begin Sunday in New York at the start of the prime minister's weeklong trip across the United States to celebrate the 30th anniversary of Israel's founding.

Due to the active state of the negotiations, Begin's visit to Washington Monday has been upgraded from the purely ceremonial. According to Israeli sources, substantive talks with Vance at the state department have been added to the schedule for Monday morning and at least a brief substantive discussion with President Jimmy Carter at the White House is expected.

There was no indication of a major breakthrough, but some indications of possible progress on some details. Vance cautiously declined to say, after meeting with Dayan, whether he was more optimistic than before.

Egyptian-Israeli negotiations have been hung up for weeks on a sweeping "statement of principles" involving Israeli withdrawal and self-determination for the Palestinians. Having failed to resolve the issues in their broad dimension, the United States is seeking to renew the momentum by focussing on the details of the on-the-ground arrangements which underlie the principles.

IRA-Foreign Guerrilla Link?

BELFAST (CP) — Security authorities, who said they have established links between the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA) and foreign guerrillas, raided IRA's legal political arm offices Thursday.

They said 15 persons were arrested in pre-dawn raids on Sinn Fein headquarters and other locations.

The foreign groups were not identified officially, but sources said they included the West German Red Army Faction, the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and terrorist organizations in the Netherlands, Japan as well as elsewhere in the Far East.

Police headquarters said the raid on Sinn Fein followed months of investigation relating to documents seized in a similar raid last December. Investigators said the documents indicated ties among the guerrilla groups.

In Dublin, Prime Minister Jack Lynch denied that the Irish republic, which adjoins Northern Ireland, is "a haven for terrorists." He also denied published reports that European Common Market countries are pressuring Dublin to enter into an extradition treaty.

The Provisional wing of the predominently Roman Catholic IRA has been fighting since 1969 to end British rule and Protestant domination in Northern Ireland. More than 2,000 persons have died in the fighting.

More than 300 police and government troops took part in the raids. Police said the 15, identified as leading members of Sinn Fein, were jailed under regulations that allow the government to hold persons seven days without formally charging them.

A Sinn Fein spokesmen said only seven of the 15 were organization members. None was identified.

British intelligence long has suspected the IRA is linked with foreign terrorist groups, especially the PLO, which well-informed sources say has provided the IRA with large quantites of weapons and has trained men in Libya and Lebanon since February, 1972.

Police said it is likely most of those arrested will be charged with promoting the aims of the outlawed IRA and conspiring to usurp the authority of police and judiciary. Authorities added that the charges will be based on the seized documents, which they said include plans such as establishing a police force in Belfast.

Several hours after the roundup, police reported IRA gunmen seriously wounded the director of a government employment office in Belfast in a street ambush. The victim was not identified.

Lynch defended his country's record against terrorism at a meeting of the governing Fianna Fail party's Northern Ireland Committee.

Scientology Memos List 'Tricks'- Paper

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Documents seized by the FBI indicate that the Church of Scientology has been waging an "attack and destroy" campaign against government investigators, public officials and journalists, according to the Washington Post.

The newspaper reported today that sources "close to an intensive federal investigation" of the church say the attacks have involved illegal surveillance, burglaries, forgeries and harassment.

Tts source says the operations documented in the Scientologists' internal memorandums seized by the FBI include the following incidents:

—Scientologists typed a bomb threat on the personal stationery of a woman, mailed it to a Scientology office and reported the threat to police.

—Scientology agents staged a fake hit-and-run accident designed to compromise the mayor of Clearwater, Fla., who had criticized the church's purchase of a Clearwater hotel.

—The Scientologists attempted to discredit a Clearwater reporter by forging a rough draft of a newspaqer story under his name, purportedly linking Florida politicians to the Mafia and passing the forgery to state legislators.

—Church members were placed in the Justice Department, Internal Revenue Service and Drug Enforcement Administration to gather intelligence and steal documents.

—The Scientologists mounted a campaign to harass prosecutors who have been handling Scientology cases.

A Scientology spokesman, Gregory Layton, told the Post the government evidence is a compilation of "false reports" put out as part of the government's "20 years of harassment."

Scaffold 'Peeled Like Apple'

WILLOW ISLAND, W.Va. (AP) — Relatives claimed their dead in a makeshift morgue today as this tiny community mourned the 51 men who plunged 50 metres to their deaths as a scaffolding peeled away from the inside of a huge tower under construction.

The big mystery is why the scaffolding collapsed without warning Thursday. Witnesses said it looked like an apple being peeled. Doctors said the men died instantaneously.

George Pepper was 100 metres from the tower when he heard something "that sounded like a big train roaring by."

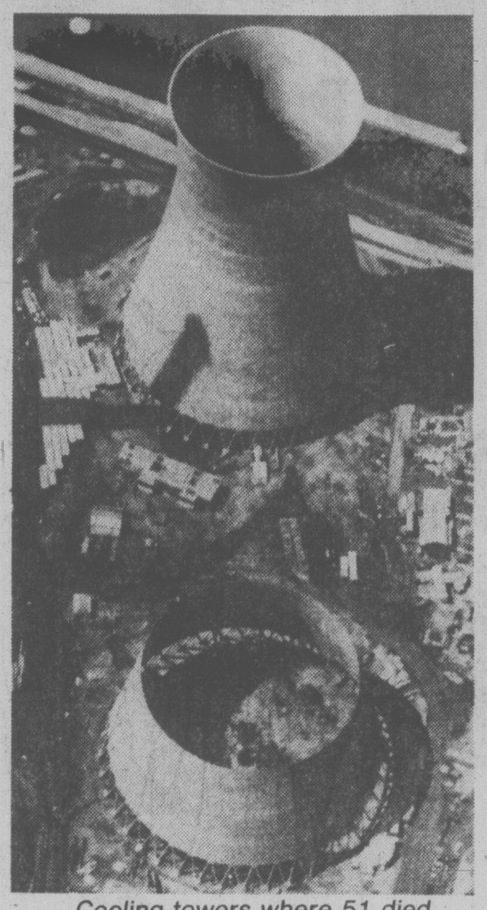
"The next thing I saw was a pile of dust. All I could see was heads busted up, legs out of socket, arms scattered around. It was just a mangled-up, God-forsaken mess."

The accident occurred Thursday as workers prepared to make the 29th of 82 concrete pours on a giant cooling tower being built at a $680-million coal-fired electrical generating plant overlooking the Ohio River here.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Occupational Safety and Health Administration said 13 inspections of the Pleasants Power Station site since 1973 had revealed "numerous violations both serious and nonserious," but he said he did not know what they were or whether they involved scaffolding.

OSHA spokesman James Foster said the most recent inspection was a year ago and that the operations of Research Cottrell Inc., the Bound Brook, N.J., subcontractor building the tower, had never been inspected.

But Thomas Buontane, director of corporate communications for the company, said the scaffold was inspected daily. He said it was "a complete mystery how this could happen. . . It's impossible."



Cooling towers where 51 died

Ten Die In One Family

ST. MARYS, W.Va. (AP) — For the last few months, Robert Steele spent most of his workdays right beside his brothers, uncles and cousins high on a scaffolding, helping to build a cooling tower at a power plant.

But on Thursday, when the scaffolding collapsed, he was on the ground. Ten members of his family were not so lucky, and were among the 51 men killed when they fell 56 metres.

"I knew that they were all up there," he said. "I work right beside them."

Lee Steele, Robert's father, said Thursday night that among those killed were his sons Larry Gale, 32, Ronald, 30, Miles, 26, and Earnest, 29; his brother Emmett, 61; his brothers-in-law James Blouir and Robert Blouir; and his nephews Brian Taylor, 18, Chester Payne, 19, and Steve Blouir. No ages were given for the Blouirs.

Later, other relatives said the Steeles were close, the men working together and playing together.

Lee Steele embraced friends and relatives throughout the day as they waited outside a makeshift morgue.

U.K. PM Probing 'Leaks'

LONDON (AP) — British Prime Minister James Callaghan disclosed Thursday he has ordered security investigations of defence ministry leaks he said were the work of "mischief makers" who are "especially dangerous".

He stunned the House of Commons with the public rebuke of the sensitive government department, and ordered Defence Minister Fred Mulley to "take appropriate action" after tracing the source of the leaks.

Callaghan said that over the past week he ordered two investigations into defence department leaks that have embarrassed his Labor government.

Both concern published reports about demands for pay raises by the armed forces. The forces were awarded a 14-per-cent increase earlier this week.

Callaghan's denunciation came when he was questioned about a report in the Times of London on Thursday that said he "snubbed" the chiefs of staff by failing to meet them to discuss the government's review of forces' pay.

The prime minister snapped: "There has been a certain amount of mischief-making going on from the ministry of defence," and the "mischief-makers ... are in my view, especially dangerous."

CARTER ALLOWS URANIUM SALE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unless Congress overrules the sale within 60 days, India will begin purchasing 16,803 pounds of low-enriched uranium from the United States to power its Tarapur atomic power station.

President Carter approved the sale Thursday after the Nuclear Regulatory Commission deadlocked on the issue last week. Carter said he had been assured that the Indian government would use the fuel only at the Tarapur station, and not for weapons.

Carter said a refusal to export the fuel "would seriously undermine our efforts to persuade India to accept full-scope safeguards, and would seriously prejudice the achievement of other U.S. non-proliferation goals."

India's agreement to operate the station exclusively on fuel supplied by the United States means that it must meet safeguards stipulated by the United States.

The United States had made a commitment several years ago to meet all of the Tarapur atomic power station's fuel requirements.

Jessica Tuchman Mathews of the National Security Council staff said that under federal law the shipment will be cut off after two years if India does not agree to full safeguards.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission voted 2 to 2 on April 20 on whether to approve the sale. A tie vote sends the question to the president for a decision.

Lance Bank Buy Halted

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge has ordered a temporary halt to an attempt by former budget director Bert Lance and a group of Arab investors to acquire a Washington area bank holding company.

The order, handed down Thursday by U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch, requires that Lance and the Arab group offer to sell back to their original owners any shares they bought of the company.

But Gasch's order left open the possibility of Lance and the other investors again buying stock in the company after they take a number of steps involving their past purchases.

The management of Financial General Bankshares, which has assets of $2.2 billion, had filed a civil suit to halt what it said was an attempt by Lance and the Arabs to take over the holding company.

Among the Arabs who bought shares were the crown prince of Abu Dhabi and the head of the Saudi Arabian Central Intelligence Agency.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has said the Lance group had offered selected Financial General stockholders $15 a share, while the going price on the open market was $12 to $12.50 a share.

NO WONDER PEOPLE STAY WITH BONDED STOCK.

Le Car rolls into Canada.

After proving its economy, durability, and performance to over 1½ million Europeans, Le Car is well on the road to success in Canada.

Standards other cars don't offer as options.

There are lots of reasons why Canadians are making Le Car their car. Le Car comes with front wheel drive, rack and pinion steering, torsion bar suspension and Michelin steel-belted radials, all standard, to tackle those snow covered mountain roads. Rabbit and Civic don't offer you this combination of standard features.

Le Car has more front seat headroom. More rear seat headroom. Even a wider hatch. Yet for all its wide open spaces, Le Car gobbles up a tighter parking space than both Rabbit and Civic.

What good is good mileage if getting there isn't any fun?

Like many small cars, Le Car gets good mileage: 57 mpg (92 km/g) highway,* 40 mpg (64 km/g) city.* But with a wheelbase as long as some bigger cars, and a fully independent suspension, car critics have been driven to praise Le Car for a ride that's exceptionally smooth and stable. Even on the roughest roads.

Other things that contribute to the fun are Le Car's optional sunroof (it's so big, we call it a Fun Roof). And front seats so comfortable, they take a backseat to no other car.

Driving is believing.

There's only one way to experience the fun of Le Car. Visit your nearest Renault dealer and take one for a test drive.

Suffice it to say you'll find returning the car difficult.

Some of the equipment illustrated optional at extra cost.

Bumpy Road Facing UN Arms Talks

OTTAWA (CP) — The United Nations will soon begin special talks on how to prevent the $350 billion-a-year military monster from swallowing mankind, but Canadian officials say obstacles to agreement are enormous.

A federal disarmament expert said Wednesday that the West, the Soviet bloc and non-aligned countries are all going to the UN special disarmament session in May with different "shopping lists" and it will be tough to reach consensus on a single set of guides for world disarmament.

These differences are already on the table in working documents submitted by the various groups.

For example, many non-aligned countries are demanding "instant nuclear disarmament," a position the West and the Soviets reject. The nuclear powers can only disarm in stages, an external affairs official said.

Behind these different positions are basic fears and mistrust which are hard to erase, particularly in a single UN session between May 23 and June 28.

The UN session in New York is not intended to replace existing disarmament talks in Europe. But some observers say it may help budge these slow-moving discussions.

While the UN session will not yield firm treaties for specific arms reductions, federal officials say they hope the conference will agree on a final declaration outlining disarmament principles and a program of action.

The Western document suggests that regional groups can then agree on specific methods for disarming.

Canada has said the conference should try to reach concensus without a vote. A declaration without over-all consent could undermine international disarmament efforts.

Federal officials say they don't expect Canada to announce any arms moves on its own. Peace groups have urged Ottawa to cut back arms exports but external affairs sources say that makes little sense unless there is international agreement Canada would only be hurting its own industry.

The UN conference is broader than the existing strategic arms limitation (SALT) and mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Europe. SALT is aimed at controlling U.S. and Soviet arms while the balanced force discussions are designed to reduce NATO and Warsaw pact forces.

More than 150 countries will be at the UN session, many of them developing nations that have only been on the fringe of world disarmament discussions before.

External affairs officials say these developing countries will be an important factor in the UN talks. Many view with suspicion any effort to limit the spread of nuclear technology because many of them need nuclear energy.

At the same time, they were spending huge amounts of money on conventional weapons. An external affairs official said these countries now spend 16 per cent of the world arms budget annually, up from six per cent 10 years ago.

About 20 per cent of Canadian arms exports go to countries outside the NATO alliance. Government officials say Canadian exports are mainly defensive equipment such as air navigational aids. Canada is the world's eighth largest arms exporter.

Canada and other Western countries are suggesting controls on conventional weapons in draft documents for the conference but some non-aligned nations want to concentrate solely on nuclear disarmament, external affairs officials say.

There is bound to be a dispute between the Soviet bloc and the West on the Soviet proposal that UN members renounce the right to use nuclear weapons in a first strike. External affairs sources say the Soviets must know the West can't accept that as NATO forces are heavily out-gunned. Giving up the right to use nuclear weapons first would eliminate a deterrent to war in Europe.

The Soviet bloc is opposed to Western proposals for on-site inspection of nuclear facilities. In fact, federal sources say it would probably be hard to enforce even if the Soviets agreed because there would be a battle about the inspection authority.

Widower Wants A New Marriage

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe that I, a 62-year-old man, am actually writing a letter to Dear Abby, but I have a problem I cannot solve. How do you or your consultants (perhaps a minister or psychiatrist) feel about deathbed promises?

The situation is as follows: I am very much in love with a 60-year-old widow. I am a widower. Our children are grown and independent. This widow and I both had good and faithful spouses. I lost mine two years ago, and she lost hers three years ago. We met by accident. Neither of us was looking for anyone.

After keeping steady company for a year, we are very much in love and want to marry. However, my wife, on her deathbed, asked me to promise her that I would never marry again. I made that promise, and now I feel guilty because I want to marry. What obligation have I to a dead spouse, and what should I do?

FEELING GUILTY

DEAR FEELING: First, shed those guilt feelings. Deathbed promises are almost always made under emotionally charged circumstances. Your only obligation is to yourself. Go ahead and marry the lady, and the sooner the better. Life is for living.

DEAR ABBY: I had a buffet dinner party at my home recently to which 12 of my relatives were invited. (One was my mother.)

The party was scheduled for 6:30. At 6:25 my mother arrived with a giant pot of turkey soup. I was caught by surprise. My dinner was already prepared and there was no way I could have served my mother's turkey soup. For one thing, I don't have enough soup bowls or soup spoons to serve 12, and even if I had, turkey soup wouldn't have been appropriate with the meal I planned.

I politely told my mother that I would put her turkey soup away and save it for another time. She was miffed and let me know it. Was I wrong, Abby? She keeps bringing it up to me that I wouldn't let her serve her turkey soup. How can I make amends for my gross error?

IN THE SOUP

DEAR IN: You weren't wrong. Tell your mother you gobbled up her turkey soup later and it was delicious.

DEAR ABBY: Since that song "Short People" came out, short people have suffered a big put-down. I'm sending you a letter you had in your column about 20 years ago. I kept it because I happen to be one of the short people. Please run it again. It might help to improve our image. Thanks. SHORTY B. HICKS

DEAR SHORTY: I agree. Short people need an occasional buildup, so here's your letter:

French cuisine is world famous, not only for its elegance but also for its exquisite sauces.

The 8-page booklet I Love To Cook French Style offers some quick and easy recipes, all with that enviable gourmet touch.

You can choose between French-Fried Chicken with Gravy Chantecler and Burgundy Meat Balls in Raisin Sauce. Or, you may fancy Meat Loaf with Montmorency Cherry Sauce. This sauce is also delicious with roast duck.

Other mouthwatering dishes include Party Time Pate, French Meat Pie, Chicken in Wine, Lamb en Brochette and Pork Chops Charcutiere.

Some recipes for vegetarians are also included, like Batter-fried Onion Rings, Onion Soup and Fish Fillts au Gratin. The fish recipe calls for the addition of some white wine. If you would rather not use wine in any of these French recipes, you can substitute with an equal quantity of water.

This little cookbook is beautifully illustrated and can be obtained from: Public Relations Department, 5415 Cote de Llesse, Montreal, Que. H4P 1A3.

Long-Term Effects of Junk Food?

caveat emptor

By LYNNE GORDON

Junk food — also known as empty calorie food has been described as any food which is high in fat, salt or sugar, and which provides a lot of calories but scarcely any other nutrients to go with them.

What are the long term effects of eating junk food? Studies done in recent years show that a diet which is heavy in processed foods, fat, sugar and salt, and which is lacking in whole grains, vegetables and fruit, is linked to heart disease, diabetes, high blood pressure and other illnesses including some forms of cancer.

Diet also appears to be linked with some forms of hyperactivity in children. Kathleen O'Bannon, head nutritionist at the Nutritional and Preventive Medical Clinic in Toronto, remarked to me that many of the young people she sees in her office suffer from hyperactivity and learning disabilities which appear to be connected to the eating of junk foods such as candy bars, potato chips and highly processed breakfast cereals.

Such children have literally been brought up on junk food — beginning with sugar and chemicals in their formulas during infancy and continuing with convenience foods with the same ingredients during childhood. For them, the transitions to a diet of natural foods including vegetables, fruit and whole grains is not unlike the giving up of a drug habit. But in time, patients at the clinic lose their cravings for processed sweets and other forms of junk food.

If they follow the natural diet with some consistency, they also show an improvement in their ability to function normally at school, despite a wide range of prior symptoms which may have included asthma, hyperactivity, learning disabilities, or in some cases crying fits and temper tantrums.

The transition from junk foods to whole grains, vegetables and fruit is not made any easier if junk foods are freely available in school cafeterias. However, the decision to ban junk food in school cafeterias in Montreal in 1974, and in Toronto more recently, may make it easier for such children in the future.

Of course, the banning of junk food from schools is opposed by the food manufacturers who have been supplying chocolate bars and cakes, cookies and soft drinks to schools across Canada for many years.

For example, Roy Sugden, president of the Confectionery Association of Canada, argues that the eating of foods which are high on calories and low on nutrients is not necessarily harmful, as long as much foods are not out of proportion to the rest of the diet.

Sheila Meagher, the Toronto School Board trustee who lead the successful campaign to ban junk foods in Toronto's high schools, disagrees strongly with this view. She told me that anybody knows that anything in moderation is fine, but that children do not as a rule eat junk food in moderation. She pointed out that a person only eats a given amount of food per day; whatever junk food is eaten takes the place of a given amount of more nutritious food in the daily diet.

Sheila Meagher sees the ban as part of an educational program which is aimed at creating a genuine association between that is taught in the classroom in health education classes, and what goes into the students' stomachs.

No Longer Short

WINNIPEG (CP) — A locally based program is helping about 200 Canadian children achieve what they never could before — growth.

The program, headed by physiologist Dr. Harry Friesen, helps drastically short children grow taller by injection of a natural substance called growth hormone.

The hormone is secreted by the pituitary gland in the neck and stimulates growth during the early stages of life. When too little hormone is secreted, the child will age normally, but will "grow up" only slightly. An estimated five to 10 per cent of drastically short persons suffer from this hormone deficiency.

Children from across Canada, including 16 Manitobans, receive injections of the hormone three times a week through the program financed by an $80,000 grant from the Medical Research Council.

Results are impressive. The children can grow by as much as four to five inches in only six months, said Dr. Friesen, although a three-inch growth per year is considered average.

Dr. Friesen, head of physiology at University of Manitoba faculty of medicine, explained the injections will not work on adults, since they have already lost their potential for further growth.

"Most of the growth takes place at the end of the long bones and spine. The cartilage is what actually grows, causing the two bone centres to keep going up with it. The cartilage disappears at the end of puberty, when a combination of the growth hormone and sex steroids combine to produce growth spurts."

Make Your Own Gutbucket

Mother Earth News

In the following article, Wisconsin State grassroots musician Marc Bristol explains how to make your own musical instruments.

One way to save money and have a good time all at once is by making your own musical instruments. Here are a few ideas for doing just that.

THE GUTBUCKET

One of the most basic members of a "pickin' and grinning'" group is the washtub bass or "gutbucket." Although the instrument's strong suit is solid rhythmic accompaniment, it can produce true notes and has a range of about an octave and a half.

Start by scrounging up a No. 1 or No. 2 washtub or similar container. Don't, however, settle for one with its bottom rusted out.

The neck for your gutbucket should be about 4½ feet long and can be anything from a whittled-downed hardwood sapling to an old rake handle. For string, I'd recommend plastic-coated, steel-core nylon clothesline.

The string is attached to the center of the upside-down washtub by one of two methods: (1) drill a hole a little larger than the gutbucket's string in the bottom of the tub, thread the string through the opening and knot the line on the other side to hold it in place, or (2) bolt a small eyebolt to the centre of the tub's bottom and tie your string to it.

To mount the neck, notch the bottom end of the wooden pole so it can be hooked on the little rim that runs around the bottom of the washtub. Then bevel off the side of the notch that faces to tub's bottom, so it won't touch the metal as the neck is leaned back and forth during a song.

Pass the string through the hole you drilled and adjust it so that it pulls taut when the line is standing straight up and the stick is leaning over the tub. Then wind the string around the neck and tie it above the hole and you're ready to play.

THE WASHBOARD

This instrument is a natural for all you table-top drummers. Any metal board will do, but glass models are out. If you can't find a good washboard around home, figure on picking one up in a junk shop.

Next, latch onto several metal thimbles and start to tap dance" on the board. You may even want to buy a couple of metal guitar thumb picks so your thumbs can dance, too.

Please don't feel that fast ragtime stuff like "Coney Island Washboard" is the only music this instrument should be turned loose on. Scrubboards are great for bluegrass and rhythm and blues. Try your board on anything.

THE JUG

You don't have to do anything to a jug to turn it into a musical instrument except at least partly empty it. Old ceramic molasses jugs are the most traditional for this use, but any kind will do the job.

Contrary to popular belief, you do not blow across the neck of the jug to produce a "pop bottle whistle" noise. Instead, press your lips tightly together and blow air through them to make sort of a "motor boat" sound. The tone is then directed into the container which resonates and amplifies it in somewhat the same way a guitar body resonates and amplifies the sound of that instrument's strings. Different tones can be produced tightening and loosening the lips.

THE KAZOO

It doesn't take anything but a comb and some waxed paper to make a kazoo. Simply wrap the paper around the comb, press it to your lips and hum a tune. You can cup your hands around the instrument for a "wah-wah" effect.

As you can see, it doesn't take much time to make these instruments, and it takes little more to learn to play them. You don't have to be a professional musician to make beautiful sounds with them, so don't worry what your first few attempts sound like. Get a few of your friends or family together some evening and see what happens!

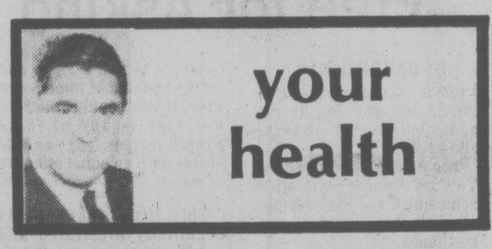
IMPORTANT FACTORS IN TOILET TRAINING



By L. L. COLEMAN, MD

We had a great deal of difficulty toilet training our first child. Everybody seemed to have a different answer and nothing seemed to work. Our second child is eight months old and I don't want to go through what we did with the first. It was a nightmare. Do you have any helpful suggestions? — Mrs. B.R.

Dear Mrs. R.:

How to begin toilet training and at what age is a problem that cannot be taken casually. In fact, most pediatricians and psychologists believe that this can be one of the most important factors in determining the emotional balance of a child during his formative years.

"Doing what comes naturally," with patience, most often accomplishes its purpose. Too much pressure on the child, conflict within the home, sibling rivalry and a great many other forces can interfere with toilet training.

When the child has not attained his "state of perfection," some parents, unfortunately, display irritability and even anger. This further exaggerates and perpetuates the problem.

I believe that you and other parents can be greatly helped by a new and unusual picture book for children and parents on the subject of toilet training. As far as I know, nothing quite like it has ever been done before. Written by Alison Mack and published by Little, Brown, this book, "Toilet Learning," was originally shown to me in manuscript form. I was impressed with its two-part approach, "A Manual for Parents" and "A Story for Kids."

The book reviews the principles of toilet training and offers a sensible guide for accomplishing it with little or no upsets for the child or parent.

The realistic pictures support the story that can be read to children in order to give them a comprehension of the objectives of toilet training.

It's a fine little book and I recommend it to you.

Every few months, I get an attack of pink eye. The strange thing about it is that I'm in good health and never know what starts it. How can I prevent it? — Miss S.S.

Dear Miss S.:

Pink eye, or conjunctivitis, is a highly contagious infection of the delicate membrane (conjunctiva) that covers the eye. This is caused by a germ and is readily passed on from one person to another, especially in schools and offices where any interchange of towels is possible.

Fortunately, the antibiotics in most instances can control these infections. Should they be difficult, special cultures are made of the pus. Then more specific antibiotics are used effectively.

Some people confuse "pink eye" with red, bloodshot eyes. Almost always these are due to fumes, smoke, chemicals, dust and foreign objects in the eyes. Eyestrain, marked fatigue, loss of sleep and allergies can be responsible for recurrent attacks of bloodshot eyes.

There are also a number of medical problems within the eyeball itself that may be responsible for your episodes of discomfort. These should be checked out by an opthalmologist (eye specialist) to be certain that there are no important basic reasons for your problem.

WARNER ROBINS, Ga. (AP) — An 89-year-old woman died after being gored by a bull which she apparently was trying to care for in her backyard, authorities said Wednesday. The body of Julia Jackson was found by her family in the yard of her home in nearby Kathleen.

ADULT FASHIONS are moving down to the younger set as this Annie Hall look by Riegel & Dechter (far left) demonstrates. Toddlers' tuxedo dress (centre) is by Janie Press while the boy's velvet suit is by Ultra. Cooper's leather bombardier jacket is modelled on the right.

The Same Styles For Boy and Girl

By ANNE-MARIE SCHIRO
New York Times

NEW YORK — It doesn't take long for fashion to filter down to the children's department. Leather jackets, shawl-collared blazers, vests, pegged pants and spencer jackets were among the up-to-the-minute styles that paraded down the runway at the Fashion Group's show of children's wear for fall. It all looked familiar, but the sizes had shrunk. Sometimes the clothes looked better that way.

When two little girls came out together — one in a fedora with a brown spencer jacket over a calf-length loose checked dress, and the other in a tweed vest and pegged pants with the bottoms rolled up — it was Annie Hall-goes-to-school. The Annie Hall look turned up again and again. There were vests with everything: They went under tweed or corduroy jackets and over all manner of shirts and frilly blouses. They went over other vests and even over a raincoat for extra warmth.

There were more neckties on the girls than on the boys. Sometimes it was difficult to tell which was which on the basis of the clothes. When two youngsters appeared wearing tweed jackets, skinny jeans, tailored shirts and vests, it was only the wisp of long hair escaping from her newsboy cap that gave away the identity of the girl.

Boys and girls also got almost identical raincoats with Burberry-style plaid linings. And those bright-colored down jackets look the same on either sex. The news in down jackets is sleeves that can be zipped out. Voila, a down vest.

Some of the best looks in the show: the classic tailoring of Geoffrey Beene for boys; the loden balmacaan and shawl-collared corduroy jacket by Anne Klein; the rosy tweed coat with sailor collar and low pleats by Timothy Dunleavy; the boy's brown leather bombardier jacket by Cooper; the toddler's black velvet party dress with tucked white tuxedo bib by Janie Press, and the felt hats by Carson/Underwood and Serendipity 3.

Therapy In School Attacked

VANCOUVER (CP) — School counselling and therapy is nothing more than an attempt to "box and stringently control" youngsters, says Dr. Thomas Szasz, author and well-known critic of psychiatry.

At a recent conference here, Szasz called family therapy "family butchery," referred to psychiatrists as "jailers masquerading as mechanics" and said the profession is "only as old as the idea of locking someone up in a hospital or institution."

Szasz, a professor of psychiatry at Upstate Medical Centre in Syracuse, N.Y., has criticized psychiatry in such books as The Myth of Mental Illness and Manufacture of Madness.

He said what often is termed mental illness is merely variation from the norm.

Szasz said he does not advocate abolishing therapy and counselling but that it should be sought privately and practised only on individuals who freely choose it.

"Government involvement in mental health is the original sin," he said. "And those who believe in compulsory treatment should be condemned as criminals and prosecuted.

NIXON TAKES HIS DEFENCE

NEW YORK — Starting Sunday, Richard Nixon mounts his major defence of his tormented presidency — but doubt remains whether the memoirs he wrote in bitter self-exile will tell an objective story.

About 70 newspapers from New York to Tokyo will begin serializing on Sunday excerpts from the disgraced president's autobiography — a work that ends with a painful account of how the Watergate scandal drove him out of office and what that did to his family.

In all, the excerpts will total about 15,000 words for domestic readers and 25,000 words for foreign readers from a book about 500,000 words long.

The complete autobiography will be made available, in three separate editions including a signed leather-bound version, after the week-long American serialization ends on May 8.

Those who have read the Nixon book describe it as frank and serious — a carefully written work that will last but with no astonishing disclosures from the only man ever forced to quit the presidency.

Millions of dollars are riding on the success of the Nixon memoirs. Reports suggest Nixon, now living in self-imposed exile in San Clemente, Calif., received $2.5 millions for the rights to his story.

He sold those rights to Warner Communications, which in turn sold newspaper serialization rights to the New York Times and the English-language hard-cover rights to Grosset and Dunlap, a New York publishing company best known for its childrens' books.

Newspapers around the world have paid about $1 million to print the excerpts—and syndicators admit they are concerned about possible premature leaks.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars in potential revenue were lost last March when the Washington Post scooped the syndicated memoirs of H. R. Haldeman, Nixon's now disgruntled chief of staff.

Speech Classes Quality Improves

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Speech classes in the Victoria Music Festival blossomed with one of the biggest entries in recent years.

They also revealed great growth in the standard according to adjudicator Gay Scrivener, who last judged at the Victoia Festival in 1972.

Full day and evening sessions that opened Monday concluded Thursday evening with the Speech Honor Performance at St.Matthias Hall.

There were 15 items by individuals and groups, chosen by Miss Scrivener on the basis of outstanding work during the week. Awards were presented and a competition was held for the intermediate championship. Winner of the latter was Kathy Olafson. Sandra Foweraker and David Wingrove were runners-up.

Other presentations were the Marion J. Ord Junior Speech Award to Heather McCorquodale; Community Arts Council Intermediate Award, Kathy Olafson; Audrey Johnson Senior Award, Hilary Freundlich; Bible Award, Kathy Olafson; Helen Smith Award, David Wingrove. Special adjudicators' awards were made to Anna Grolle and Lynda-Mary Greene.

Poetry, prose, drama and mime were represented by the participants. They were, Craigflower School, Paul Bergbusch, Lisa Duggan and Jimmy Painter, Heather Dong, St.Patrick's School Speech Choir, Yvonne McLaren, Richard Thompson, Anna Grolle, Elspeth Futcher, St.Andrew's School, Heather McCorquodale, David Cooper, Martha Readings, Lynda-Mary Greene and Hilary Freundlich.

The Greater Victoria Schools Symphony playing under four different conductors as four separate entries in a non-competitive class, still got "A" for effort from adjudicator Dr. Howard Leyton-Brown at a Festival string session this week:

"On the whole, well done," said Leyton-Brown. "The orchestra is the instrument of conductors. Everyone must do his very best because one inattentive player can ruin a planned effect. Everyone here tried extremely hard," he commented.

The conductors were Trevor Jones, Bernard Rain, Len Scorey and Rocky Whittaker. Composers represented in the performance included Liszt, Mendelssohn, Brahms, Enelsco, Bizet, Schubert and Bernstein.

Schools participating in the orchestra were Arbutus, Central, Colquitz, Lansdowne, Oak Bay Junior and Senior, Reynolds, Spectrum, Victoria High and S.J. Willis.

In the open cello solo concerto class, Marlene Tureski received 91 marks and Gail O'Riordan was a close runner-up with 90. In the violin open solo concerto class Mark Neumann impressed the adjudicator deeply and received a mark of 92.

Stephen Calder who was winner in the class for open strings performance, the festival's most prestigious series of diploma level events, received a probing and admiring adjudication and although Leyton-Brown obviously considers marks at this level redundant, was also up in the nineties.

Marks of 90 are sparingly handed out by all adjudicators who regard that bracket as a distinction not to be lightly earned. Phyllis Schuldt, a constructive and warm-hearted adjudicator is definitely a conservative marker and her first 90 of this festival went to young Theresa Lowe in a big class of under 15s playing 20th century music.

Wayne: 'I Feel Great'

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — John "Duke" Wayne came home from three weeks in a Boston heart surgery ward declaring "Hell, I feel great" and he wants to "lie down a couple of days and start to work. What do I want to slow down for?" Wayne asked. In Boston, his doctors said they hoped Wayne, now 70, would relax for about a month. Wayne said he wanted to get back to work next week studying scripts of possible future movie roles. Wearing a Western hat and looking thin but fit, Wayne stepped from a twin-engine private jet that carried him from Boston to Orange County Airport and walked about 30 yards to a group of reporters.

LOS ANGELES — Creditors' claims of more than $1 million were nearly double the size of actress Jayne Mansfield's estate, county Harry Hufford, county chief administrative offices said Thursday. The creditors finally settled for $400,000 from the $575,672 estate, while the actress's five children each received $1,700.

NEW YORK — She may be 66, but Ginger Rogers isn't ready to hang up her dancing shoes. Miss Rogers told a news gathering at a mirrored Manhattan discotheque on Thursday that she plans to begin a North American nightclub tour next month. And this fall, a record album "of songs associated with my career" will be released in England. That career took flight in the 1930s, and in 40 years she has made 73 movies — 10 of them in which her dancing partner was Fred Astaire.

NEW YORK — Former Attorney General John Mitchell has left hospital after having his right hip replaced, but still doesn't have to go back to jail for his Watergate conviction. After leaving Columbia Presbyterian Medical Centre Thursday, Mitchell began his fifth consecutive furlough, approved personally by Attorney General Griffin Bell.

NEW YORK — Mikhail Baryshnikov, the dancer who defected from the Soviet Union to join the American Ballet Theatre, says he plans to dance for the rival New York City Ballet. Baryshnikov, 30, who this year received an Oscar nomination as best supporting actor in the film The Turning Point, said Wednesday he will leave the American Ballet Theatre when the current season ends June 10.

His Taxes For The Birds

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) may think it's heard them all. But Paul Waliga has come up with a new reason for delaying an audit — he's got a family of birds nesting on his old receipts.

It started sometime this spring when a bird slipped into a tool shed behind his house and nested in the brown bag where Waliga keeps his old cheques and receipts. Now there are six baby birds chirping away in the bag.

"I got the notice to have the audit," Waliga said. "I came out here, got the bag and started walking away.

Educated RCs Loyal to Church

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Educated Roman Catholics are loyal to the church, devout and confident, but often disagree with official church doctrine, a Gallup poll of U.S. Catholics says.

George Gallup Jr., president of the American Institute of Public Opinion, reported findings of a national survey of 1,405 Roman Catholics to a Catholic Press Association convention being held here.

Gallup said that in the past, more educated Roman Catholics left the church when they began to disagree with its teachings.

"That is still true to an extent for those with a high school education, but those who have gone on to college are taking positions divergent from official church teaching," Gallup said.

UNDERGROUND GAS LEAK FOUND

ST. EUSTACHE (CP) — About 200 families evacuated from their homes because of a massive gasoline leak contaminating this town's sewer system must wait three months before returning, Mayor Guy Belisle says.

He told a special meeting of the town council Wednesday night that after a two-week investigation geologists have finally discovered where the bulk of gasoline has gathered, forming a natural underground reservoir.

The families will not be able to return until all work in the danger zone is completed and an estimated 8,000 gallons is pumped to the surface, he said.

Mayor Belisle also announced that the city administration had asked the Quebec government for $550,000 in financial aid, adding that the clean-up operation was costing about $30,000 a day.

To date, more than 8,000 gallons of gasoline have been pumped to the surface at an average cost of $1,000 an hour.

The emergency in this industrial town of 25,000 persons, about 30 kilometres northwest of Montreal, started April 12 when gasoline leaking into a local sewage pumping station caused an explosion which injured four persons.

Far-Flung Rose Relatives

An absorbing side interest of gardening develops from the discovery of dissimilar plants within a given botanical Family. Only a botanist knows about this in full, so the rest of us must go to a good garden encyclopedia to look up a Family to see the list of genera included.

The Rose Family is a good example for it contains a number of our garden plants that we as untrained botanists would not suspect as being in any way related to the garden rose. Least likely are the shrubby Spiraeas, Astilbes and Aruncus. Neither Astilbe nor Aruncus has noticeable petals, which bewilders us in our search for identity. Because of this lack, I thought of two other garden plants and wondered if they too might be members of the Rose Family.

Looking up the Family Rosaceae in L. H. Bailey's Hortus Second (Dictionary of Gardening) I found the humble but pretty little herb Burnet (botanically Sanguisorba) and Meadowsweet (Filipendula) both listed as belonging to the Rose Family.

If you know these two, you will have been intrigued with the similarity of their foliage in basal rosettes of finely cut leaves. But the botanists study the flower and the flower parts for clues to identity. However, the herb Burnet has smooth greyish leaves while Meadowsweet leaves are hairy and a dark, rich green. Flowers are tiny, on upright spikes, airy and delicate; insignificant by some standards.

Most gardeners are able to see some resemblance of flower between several of the domestic fruit trees and the Rose. The Quinces, Pears, Apples, Plums, are all in the Rose Family, as are the cultivated garden berries such as black and loganberries, as well as strawberries.

It seems strange to find that the northern temperate zones depend almost completely on members of the Rose Family for their edible fruits, and yet this is as it should be. Many ornamental trees and shrubs commonly seen in our gardens also are included.

The fine evergreen Photinia, for several past weeks a lovely sight on the Finlayson Street entrance to Mayfair's parking lot, owes its hardiness no doubt to its Rose Family lineage. One or two other species that are native to Japan are not so reliably hardy in winter as is this variety with crimson color in the new leaves of spring.

Having gone this far, it is not surprising to find Firethorn (Pyracantha) and Cotoneaster in the Rose Family listing.

The tiny flowers of both these familiar shrubs do indeed resemble the wild simple form of Rose, even to these untutored eyes. We can see the four or five sepals and petals, and count the more than five stamens if we are inclined. These are essential characteristics for the Family.

The fruits or coverings for the seeds take many forms as can be imagined after going this far in our search. They may be hips (as in the wild and garden roses), pomes (as in the apple and pear) or drupes (as the berries). A less familiar name for a seed covering is the achene of Burnet, the herb, and of Meadowsweet.

You never know where a gardening interest will lead which is only one of the attractions of the work. Young people still in school who begin to realize its vast scope often find a life's study and occupation by discovering some simple fact about plants while helping (perhaps reluctantly) in the family garden. This can well be the opening door to an absorbing future.

309 IN MEMORIAM

ANDERSON, Andrew — In loving memory of our dear father and grandfather who passed away April 28, 1975.
Always smiling, happy and content
Loved and respected wherever he went
Always helpful, always kind
What a beautiful memory he left behind.
Carmel, Mary and boys.

PEAKE — In loving memory of a dear husband, George F. Peake, who passed away April 28, 1977.
If we could have one lifetime wish,
One dream that could come true,
We'd pray with all our hearts,
For yesterday and you.
From loving wife Eileen and family.

BEAVER-JONES — In loving memory of Aileen (Penny) who passed away April 28, 1977, so sadly missed by all who knew her.
"For we have loved you dearly
More dearly than the spoken word can tell."
—From her husband Fred, and her sisters Victoria, Kathleen and Elsie.

PEAKE — In loving memory of a dear father, George F. Peake, who passed away April 28, 1977.
If I had one lifetime wish,
One dream that could come true,
I would pray to God with all my heart,
For yesterday and you.
If teardrops were a stairway
And memories a lane,
I would walk all the way to heaven,
And bring you back again.
A thousand times I needed you,
A thousand times I've cried
If all by love could have saved you dad
You never would have died.
—From his loving daughter Christine.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.

Naval Vessels Heading Home

Three Esquimalt-based naval vessels return home next Thursday after logging more than 20,000 miles in the southwest Pacific.
They are the destroyers HMCS Restigouche and HMCS Kootenay and the supply ship HMCS Provider, all under the command of Capt. Stanley Riddell, commander of the Second Canadian Destroyer Squadron.

Also returning will be the destroyer HMCS Terra Nova, which left March 22 to join the other three ships.

The dockyard of CFB Esquimalt will be open at 9 a.m. for relatives and friends to greet the crews.

The most recent naval exercise in which the ships took part was dubbed Rimpac 78 and involved ships, aircraft and personnel from Canada, the United States, New Zealand and Australia.

During the time they were away Kootenay, Restigouche and Provider paid visits to Hawaii, Western Samoa, Fiji, Tonga, New Zealand and Australia.

Also arriving will be the New Zealand frigate HMNZS Waikato, which joined the Canadian ships in early February. Waikato will continue as a squadron unit during the summer, taking part in the Captain Cook bicentennial celebrations and making various port calls along the west coast of North America.

Also returning at 10 a.m. Thursday will be three destroyers of the Canadian Training Squadron — HMCS Saskatchewan, HMCS Yukon and HMCS Qu'Appelle, all under the command of Capt. C.M. Thomas.

After spending the coming weekend in port, the three ships will sail Monday to complete five weeks of exercising off the west coast of the United States, returning three days later.

McGeer Slammed over Pot

Education Minister Pat McGeer's comments on pot smoking teachers are an arrogant intrusion into the jurisdiction of local school boards, the president of the Greater Victoria Teachers Association (GVTA) said today.

And according to a spokesman for the B.C. Civil Liberties Association, marijuana smoking is no more or less grounds for dismissal than impaired driving.

McGeer said Wednesday school trustees may be able to use the misconduct section of the Public Schools Act to fire teachers who smoke marijuana — even if not found guilty of the offence in court.

The minister also said teachers who smoke marijuana are not of the highest moral character and should not be allowed to teach children.

GVTA president Sid Langhelt said McGeer has no business telling school trustees how to deal with teachers who smoke marijuana.

The minister is out of line making moral judgements about pot smoking teachers, Langhelt said.

"It hasn't been proved to me that people who smoke pot are defective in their moral character," he said.

The minister said he believes smoking marijuana is an act of misconduct that is legal grounds for dismissal.

"People who tinker with drugs should not be tainting the minds of our youngsters. I am sure every parent in the province is behind me on this one," McGeer said.

He was commenting on the recent conditional discharge granted to Dennis Hilton, a Coquitlam auto mechanics instructor.

According to Linda Hird, executive assistant to the CLA, misconduct is an untried, undefined section of Public Schools Act and should not be applied to minor offences.

If the section is interpreted to apply to smoking marijuana, it must also apply to impaired driving offences, she said.

"The school board should keep out of the private lives of its teachers.

Langhelt said McGeer'r remarks were unrealistic and above and beyond his role as education minister.

"He should look at some of his former collegues in university who have openly stated they smoke pot."

McGeer has no right pushing his moral standards on teachers, Langhelt said.

If McGeer wants teachers to maintain such high moral standards, he should treat them with more respect.

"He doesn't finance education in a high moral way, Langhelt said.

"McGeer has extremely high expectations, but the ministry doesn't treat us that way."

He said the pot smoking issue is a personal matter between the teacher and the individual school board.

The Public Schools Act has traditionally been interpreted to mean that teachers with court discharges must be reinstated.

Lowly-Rated Site Chosen for Centre

A proposed $25-million hotel and convention facility on the Inner Harbor was given the nod by city council Thursday night.

At the same time six other locations in Victoria were identified as better sites for a civic centre.

In a meeting at the new Victoria West community centre council voted to inform the provincial government that the city had no objections to a proposal by Oakcrest Park Estates to build a multi-million dollar hotel on the former Sidney Roofing Plant site on Songhees Road.

The province has been pressing City Hall to come up with some recommendation regarding the development proposal before the Provincial Capital Commission passed judgment on it.

Council approved a motion stating that "While the Songhees site is far from the ideal location for a convention facility, a hotel with meeting facilities of an appropriate scale would be acceptable to the City provided that arrangements are made by the applicant for adequate roads, access, parking, sewage, drainage and water supply."

The motion added, however, that Victoria would prefer to see a civic centre at adjacent to the Crystal Gardens or at other preferred locations.

Council's advisory planning commission (APC), which recommended the motion concerning the Oakcrest proposal, provided a list of ten possible civic centre sites. The Songhees road location rated seventh overall.

The APC's list of the top ten leading locations was:

—Crystal Gardens vicinity, where there are 5 acres available. Was rated highly because of its relation to existing hotels, downtown services and good transportation links.

—East frontage of the Empress, where 2.9 acres in private ownership are available.

—Ship Point, with 2acres of city-owned waterfron. APC commented that it was close to services with an attractive setting but th:.n were access problems.

—Rithet's Wharf: provincially-owned waterfront site of 2.87 acres, with assetts similar to Ship Point.

—Rotherham Place, with 1.7 privately-owned acres; well related to downtown and with good access, said the APC.

—St. Ann's, whith 6.7 provincially-owned acres, was rated as having an attractive setting, reasonable access, but was judged remote from downtown.

—Oakcrest site; with 6.3 acres owned by the province but under lease to Oakcrest. (The lease is expiring and Oakcrest is seeking a 99 year extension.)

Department of Transport site: federally-owned site of 4.2 acres; potentially attractive setting, but remote from downtown and with servicing and access problems.

—Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway block: City block of 3 acres, owned by CPR. Remote from downtown services, but with reasonable road access.

—Memorial Arena vicinity; Approximately 1.4 acres to the northeast of the arena, with similar problems as the E&N block.

Two Planes Still Missing

Several armed forces aircraft and several civilian planes searched again today for two planes reported missing, one since last Friday and the other, Monday.

A Hiller helicopter, piloted by David Steel, 35 of Mission, with the aircraft's owner, David Hunpherville, 38, of Queen Charlotte City, has been missing since Friday when it left Vancouver for Queen Charlotte City.

The second missing plane is an American-owned single-engine Cessna 185 with three people aboard that left Bella Coola on Monday, bound for Seattle via Nanaimo. It failed to make a scheduled radio check with Cassidy Airport near Nanaimo.

A third aircradt reported missing on Thursday was found at 3 p.m. Thursday undamaged on the B.C. Railway right-of-way 80 kilometres south of Dease Lake. The Hughes 500 helicopter was forced down because of engine trouble on a flight from Prince George to Whitehorse, Yukon. The four people unboard were unharmed.

They were taken off by a helicopter from Yukon Airlines.

Meanwhile the search has been called off for the American fishboat Superior, reported missing by the United States coast guard on Thursday. Travelling from Seattle to Juneau, Alaska, she had been last seen leaving Port Hardy.

She had been thought to be due in Juneau on Wednesday but is not expected there until Saturday.

Esquimalt Poll On New PSB

Whether or not Esquimalt gets a new Public Safety Building will be decided Saturday as residents head to the polls.

They'll be voting on a referendum which seeks to give council authority to borrow up to $875,000 to finance construction of the proposed new building.

The project, if approved, will mean a tax hike of 1.75 mills over the next 20 years, but Mayor Art Young feels it is a small price to pay for what the municipality will get.

He says the present quarters are shabby, antiquated and overcrowded.

The plans for the new building incorporate ambulance, police and fire services under one roof. The design calls for 17,500 square feet of floor space of which 13,200 square will be used immediately and the rest left for future expansion.

Voting will take place at the Recreation Centre on Fraser Street.

Throughout the week Esquimalt police have held an open-house to show people the conditions under which they have to work.

"We've got nothing to lose," an officer said. "We know our facitities are so outdated. Now it's just a matter of letting the public know too."

Coup Traps B.C. Families

A Victoria woman whose brother is among B.C. Hydro employees working in strife-torn Afghanistan said today the group was within hours of leaving the country when they were trapped by a coup d'etat. (See story on page 30).

Hydro spokesman John Sexton identified the employees as Rex Hundleby and his wife, Edna; John Ellis, his wife Sherrill and their three children; Al Carmichael and Allan Husband and his wife, Michaela, from Prince George.

Margaret Bissenden, of Victoria, said her brother Allan has been in Kabul for the past 18 months.

She said he and the other employees had completed their contracts with CIDA and were within hours of leaving the country when the coup erupted.

Their escape route, however, was cut off when rebel forces bombed the airport.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe said Thursday that none of the Hydro employees or their families now living in Afghanistan had been harmed in the coup d'etat.

Wolfe told a news conference that the Hydro workers are working with the Canadian International Development Agency and the ministry of water and power there.

The minister said the external affairs department and CIDA officials advised him that no Canadians were killed or injured in the coup. Efforts were being made to contact the Hydro employees.

Special School Planned

A public hearing is expected in the latter part of May on an application to open a Montessori school in Oak Bay.

Council has agreed to amend its bylaws permitting a change of use of the property formerly occupied by St. Christopher's School at 2619 Currie, which has been used for several years as a ballet school.

An application from a group of teachers and parents of Queenswood Montessori School proposes the Oak Bay property as a Montessori kindergarten, with option to purchase based on the zoning change.

It is proposed to operate a licenced day care facility for 50 children from 8.30 a.m. to 3.30 p.m. Monday to Friday during the school term. Zoning at present allows 50 ballet and art students.

Task Force Studies City Core Shoppers

Victoria merchants are establishing a downtown retail task force to study all the shopping needs of the core area, including parking and transportation.

Recreation Minister Sam Balwf said the new committee is being organized by members of the Victoria Downtown Business Association but will include the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, the Victoria Real Estate board and any other interested group.

"There has never been a comprehensive market research study of the downtown area — what type of shoppers come downtown, how do they travel? — that is what we have in mind."

Bawlf said he welcomes the offer of real estate board president Bev Highton to participate in the study and he will phone Highton personally to ask him to join the task force.

"I was heartened by his comments," Bawlf said.

Highton said Thursday he would be willing to start or participate in the task force provided the terms of reference were broadened to include a convention centre and other downtown needs.

Bawlf today said the study will be quite broad, including parking and transportation, but the specific study of a convention centre is being conducted by the regional board and to have the new task force study the same question would "represent an unnecessary duplication."

Bawlf said the two studies should dovetail, should be conducted simulaneously and with communication between the two groups — but should be carried out separately.

Bawlf held a meeting Wednesday morning with some businessmen on the question of a task force and another meeting is set for Tuesday.

Derek Denny, a member of the Downtown Victoria Business Association, confirmed that the formation of a downtown retail task force is very near.

Denny said he understands the committee will be open to all interested people and would not be started by or confined to any one organization.

"I welcome the comments by Bev Highton and I am pleased the real estate board will participate in this," Denny said. "I also share his concern about a downtown convention centre. It is urgently needed."

Bawlf said he is confident the study undertaken by the regional district will be helpful in obtaining a civic—convention—arts centre for Victoria.

"The regional board is the proper group to be handling the study because a civic centre would benefit more than Victoria City," Bawlf said.

He noted the provincial government owns 100 acres of land in Victoria and some of this might be available for a convention centre, a department store or both, depending upon zoning decisions taken by Victoria council.

He said he was only making proposals and any decision on land use would have to come from Victoria council.

RCMP Acts 'Accepted'

VOGEL
. . .way of life

Deputy-Attorney-General Richard Vogel said Thursday the people of B.C. do not mind illegal activity by the RCMP.

In a telephone interview printed in the Globe and Mail, Vogel said such an attitude is becoming a way of life in B.C. and he wants to change that by making apparently unlawful RCMP activity lawful.

But Vogel's boss, Attorney-General Garde Gardom, said today the sentiments expressed by the deputy attorney-general are his own.

"I don't necessarily share them," Gardom said.

"He's entitled to his views."

Gardom stressed that the RCMP must at all times be accountable for their activities.

Testimony last week at the federal government inquiry into RCMP activities revealed that since 1970, the RCMP has performed about 400 break-ins without warrants in B.C.

Vogel said the police find the break-ins necessary.

"We have to make them lawful, that is all."

He said he began investigating the matter when the news of the break-ins was made public. He said he received a phone call from Gardom who told him to do something about the situation.

However, there was no public outcry, said Vogel.

"We do have confidence in our police force, clearly. And clearly, as far as my reading is concerned, the community will tolerate unlawful activity in the police force. That seems to be the message.

"But as deputy attorney-general I am very concerned that that does not become a way of life. I say that for our attorney-general and everybody in the department and I think for the senior RCMP people."

Vogel said he was told that the senior RCMP officers did not know about the break-ins. However, testimony at the inquiry indicated that the break-ins were condoned by senior members of the force.

WILLIAM HEAD FACELIFT SET

Willian Head prison will get a $211,950 facelift, federal Public Works Minister Judd Buchanan announced today.

An addition to an existing building to provide staff dining facilities and other alterations are scheduled to be completed by mid-December.

The contract went to Herb Bate Ltd. of Victoria, which submitted the lowest of five bids.

Bonds for Debts 'Just Politics'

The Socred government's decision to pay off the provincial direct debt through a bond issue is nothing but a political move, Opposition MLAs say.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe told a press conference Thursday the $261.4 million debt will be covered by a single bond issue which will be repayable in 10 annual instalments ending May 1, 1988.

Money for the bonds will be borrowed from Canada Pension Plan funds turned over to B.C. by Ottawa and from internal pensions funds such as the teachers' and government employees' pensions.

NDP finance critic Dave Stupich (Nanaimo) says CPP provides only about $400 million — not enough to cover both the heavy-borrowing B.C. Hydro and the bond issue announced by Wolfe.

Therefore the province will have to go to the New York money markets to borrow the difference.

"With the Canadian dollar the way it is, that borrowing will be pretty expensive," he said.

Both Stupich and Liberal leader Gordon Gibson said the 10-year period is pure politics. The Socreds have blamed the NDP for the debt and want it to remain on the books as a constant reminder, they said.

Both said government revenues show interest on its cash and short-term loans are at $32 million. This indicates the government has more than enough money in the bank to pay the debt off without further delay.

Stupich called the debt politically contrived and one which the government would have no trouble paying off.

Wolfe said the $261.4 million debt was incurred during the NDP administration, and after the Socreds took over, a series of short-term loans were made to cover the interest on the deficit, but no inroads were made on the principle.

Interest on the bond issue is 9.125 per cent. Interest on two of the five earlier short-term borrowings was eight per cent.

Wolfe explained the higher interest rate reflects the difference between short-term and long-term loans.

Wolfe said the reason for consolidating the five short-term bond issues into a single large one is so the government can spread out the payback more evenly over a longer period of time.

This method avoids a large payment in a single budget year.

The first instalment due in May next year will be for $48 million.

Board Hunts Industries For Sooke

An industrial commission is to be set up to encourage more industry in the village of Sooke.

The Capital Regional District board has decided to apply for supplementary letters patent so that it can assume responsibility for community industrial development in Sooke.

The board decided that Greater Victoria's economic development commissioner, Barry Mayhew, could take on the job of development commissioner for the region.

The province will pay 90 per cent of the cost of the committee, which is to be appointed by Sooke regional director Charles Perkins to work with Mayhew.

Perkins said Thursday Sooke would be an attractive place for some small industries, such as component manufacturing. It would also be an ideal place for the head offices of small companies.

"Right now we're really a one-industry area and we would like to have a little diversity," he said.

He said money is available under the federal-provincial industrial development agreement, which excludes the Lower Mainland and southern Vancouver Island from getting assistance but includes all other areas of the province.

Regional planner Peter Hammer said he had discussed the proposal with the financing agency and it was decided Sooke is an eligible area.

"There is money available from senior governments for this and we may as well take advantage of the situation," Perkins said.

Slipping Dollar Crushes Band

A drastic slip in the value of the Canadian dollar is blamed by Oak Bay Band Parents' Association for an estimated $12,400 deficit in this year's European tour.

The association is appealing for municipal help in making up the deficit.

Council has already disposed of 1978 grant applications but will reconsider the request when the band association knows exactly how much it will be short.

W. J. Bell, association president, said the students and parents hoped to raise $10,000, of which half would go to the tour band and the rest to support other band activities.

Fund-raising projects up to this month netted $6,800 and it is expected three remaining projects will return $1,800, still considerably short of the goal, Bell said.

"With the devaluation of the Canadian dollar and the strengthening of European currencies, the total cost of the tour has risen from $147,000 to $158,000. We are therefore faced with a probable shortage of $1,400 in our fund raising and an increase of $11,000 in tour costs for a deficit of $12,400," he said.

That means an added cost for each touring band member of $104, to which each participant will be asked to contribute.

Sewers Studied

The 2,700 residents of Saanich's Cordova Bay area will have to decide some time in the next few months whether they want sewers, which will attract new development, or retention of the residential status quo.

Mayor Mel Couvelier told members of the Cordova Bay Community Association Thursday that area residents should consider that question. But he set no time limit for an answer.

Couvelier said Saanich is holding sewer capacity in reserve for Cordova Bay but added: "But how long should we retain the capacity before releasing it to go elsewhere in the municipality?

"We have the capacity if you want sewers. The decision rests with you."

Smuggler's Plots End In Jailing

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Francis Patrick Ahern — a man who tried to wheel and deal in multi-million dollar schemes, including gun-running — ended up Thursday as just another loser.

The 48-year-old Victoria man stood up in a New York district court and drew an 18-month jail term for conspiring to smuggle out of the U.S. enough weapons to equip a small army.

A co-accused, Dr. Anthony Morelli of Newport Beach, Calif., got the same sentence.

The jailing of Ahern and Morelli ended a joint investigation by top Canadian and U.S. law enforcement agencies — an investigation which was approved at the highest level of the U.S. government.

The investigation was launched after undercover U.S. customs agents suspected a top organized crime figure of illegally dealing in arms.

The man — who has not been publicly identified — holds a controlling interest in a large arms manufacturing company in New Jersey which is reported to be in financial difficulties.

Although Ahern went to jail, mainly as a result of the work of a customs agent who posed as a Latin American revolutionary, the organized crime figure remains at large.

A spokesman for the Co—ordinated Law Enforcement Unit in Victoria said the arms deal was initiated in Winnipeg late last year.

Two Winnipeg men, Barry Dennis Gunn, 36, a chartered accountant, and Dr. Alexander Avurusi Apaya, 44, a physician originally from the Sudan, have been charged with conspiring to break U.S. federal laws. They have pleaded not guilty and are awaiting trial in Winnipeg.

The undercover agent who represented himself as a Latin American revolutionary originally ordered $5.5 million worth of arms including tanks and aircraft, but the order was later pared to half that amount.

CLEU became involved in the case on Jan. 11 when RCMP national criminal intelligence in Winnipeg asked officers here to check out a phone number in connection with an undercover arms investigation.

The number was traced to Ahern's residence at 1-1426 Gladstone.

Police suspected Ahern as early as 1972 of being involved in illicit arms deals.

Last May his name came up in connection with a cache of 114 revolvers and handguns that U.S. customs officials discovered secreted in the door panels of a 1976 Dodge being shipped out of Houston, Texas, bound for Jordan.

The car was shipped in the name of Ahmid Mohammed Rashid, but the shipper on the invoice was Francis P. Ahern Shipping and Trading Co. of Victoria.

Ahern, interviewed by police, denied any knowledge of the arms and said he thought the contract was to export cement. He also denied giving Rashid authority to use his company name and since police had no evidence to the contrary charges were never laid, the CLEU spokesman said.

A warrant was issued for the arrest of Rashid but he fled the U.S. and is now somewhere in the Middle East.

On Jan. 13, two days after CLEU received the phone number, Ahern and another Victoria businessman flew to Winnipeg. Police had them under surveillance the entire time.

2 Rail Unions Veto Pact

MONTREAL (CP) — Two rail unions broke ranks and refused today to sign a national contract negotiated last February by the Associated Railway Unions (ARU) and the country's major railways.

The International Association of Machinists and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, representing about 7,500 workers between them, indicated they wouldn't sign the agreement despite the results of a national ratification vote, ARU officials said.

Members of the machinists and the electrical workers voted to reject the contract, but when the results were pooled Thursday with tallies from the other 15 unions which make up the ARU, the contract was approved by 52 per cent of all rail workers.

Election Unlikely In June—Trudeau

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau indicated Thursday there probably will not be a federal election in June.

Trudeau said at his weekly news conference that he thinks Parliament should sit at least "a few more days" to approve a bill allowing trials in both official languages.

Thursday was the likely day for the prime minister to announce an election for June 26, the last possible election date in that month. Prime ministers usually allow 60 days between the election call and voting day to give the chief electoral officer time to prepare.

Trudeau said his personal view is that it would be worthwhile to have Parliament continue its work on the language bill and other proposed legislation. That bill has yet to receive second reading and possibly will be before the Commons today or early next week.

The prime minister was careful not to close off the possibility of an early election, in late June or early in July.

He met with the cabinet in regular session Thursday. Before the cabinet were the results of the latest Goldfarb survey. The results may have been more favorable than other recent surveys the Liberals had received, because the prime minister was in very good humor. He smiled frequently, joked with some questioners and generally displayed a much better humor than he did a week earlier at his press conference.

Earlier surveys commissioned by the Liberals, according to informed sources here, indicated unexpected party weakness in Ontario with the possibility of at least two cabinet ministers being defeated.

Although he dropped no more hints about the date, Trudeau did indicate that the country soon will be told whether an election will be held.

He said that if he thought the election should wait until the fall or next year, he would let people know. In fairness, he would tell people not to count on an early dissolution of Parliament.

Next week is too late to call a June 26 election. The prime minister will be looking at early July by that time.

Mid-summer elections are not popular and most observers think that if the vote is not called for July 10, the prime minister will wait for the fall. A July 10 election likely would be announced near the end of the second week in May.

The election also could be held July 3, in which case it would be announced toward the end of next week.

Federal elections are always held on a Monday.

Sagging $ Doubles M-B Profit

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., mainly as a result of the weakened Canadian dollar, doubled its first-quarter profits compared to the same period last year, company president Calvert Knudsen reported Thursday.

Speaking at the annual meeting of shareholders, Knudsen said net earnings for the first three months of 1978 were $16.9 million or 73 cents a share, compared to $8.2 million or 39 cents a share in the same period last year.

He said the rest of the year should be good for the company.

Sales and other income were $458.5 million compared to $369.3 million, and the return on capital employed was 7.9 per cent as opposed to 4.9 per cent. The figures are unaudited.

INDIANS BLOCK CPR RAILS

CRANBROOK (CP) — Residents of the St. Mary's Indian reserve erected a wooden barrier Thursday morning across a local CP Rail line which cuts though their land near this southeastern British Columbia city.

Band administrator Lloyd Lezard said the band is protesting CP Rail's refusal to contain the progressive erosion caused by a faulty dike along the rail line.

About four trains a day normally use the tracks. Only one approached the barrier Thursday, and it backed up rather than try and crash the blockade.

The train stopped well before the barrier, and backed up after a friendly conversation between reserve residents and the those on the train, including M.A. Lypka, superintendent of CPR's Kootenay division.

Lypka said the railway would not try and run any trains through the blockade. "We want to settle this in a peaceful way with no demonstration," he said.

Lezard said he was told that a CP Rail lawyer from Vancouver was called to the company's head office in Montreal to discuss the matter.

The rail line was relocated about 10 years ago but the dike adjacent to it failed to halt continual erosion which has claimed about 80 or 90 acres, Lezard said. He said CP Rail should be held responsible for the damage.

Canada Props Dollar

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced arrangements Thursday night for massive foreign borrowings in West Germany and the United States as a further defence against the decline of the Canadian dollar in currency-exchange markets.

The third major borrowing in less than two months includes 1.5 billion West German marks — equal to about $725 million U.S. — and an unspecified large standby credit being negotiated with U.S. and other foreign banks.

Market authorities estimate the U.S. standby credit will be up to $1 billion U.S. This would raise the total of foreign loans and standby credits arranged in recent weeks to $4.97 billion U.S.

The last direct borrowing from Europe was a loan of $268 million in 1968 from West Germany, Italy and the United States.

Sinclair Stevens, Progressive Conservative finance spokesman in the Commons, said the repeated borrowings demonstrate "the depths of the problem" in Canada's slack economy as reflected in the declining foreign-currency reserves and slumping dollar. He predicted further loans from Switzerland and Japan.

Such borrowings, with heavy commitments in debt, interest and exchange payments abroad, mean Canada "loses more and more control over its economy," he said in an interview outside the Commons.

Hockey Fights Must End: AG

Attorney-General Garde Gardom said today the beating of a B.C. Junior League hockey player in Nanaimo Sunday was a disgusting display and warned if the league can't clean up its act, then governments will have to take action.

Gardom said he would be reluctant to step in because the responsibility lies with the league and team owners.

But he said hockey has sunk to a deplorable state when it gets to the point where Canada's national sport has to be policed through the justice system.

The league should change its rules so fighters are immediately ejected from the ice for the rest of the game. Fines should also be stiffer, he said.

During the Junior hockey playoff game between the Nanaimo Clippers and the Penticton Vees, Penticton player Brent Bourne became involved in an off-ice brawl.

Half a dozen Nanaimo players dragged him down the corridor near their dressing room and repeatedly beat him.

Gardom warned if coaches are encouraging their youngsters to play violent hockey they had better stop.

League president Ernie McLean said he told the team owners when he took over the job two years ago that attendance at the games was not good and warned them to change their style of play.

McLean said he didn't suggest a more aggressive brand of hockey.

Engineer Guilty

MONTREAL (CP) — A 56-year-old engineer was found guilty today of two charges laid in March, 1976, under the Official Secrets Act.

Alexander Peter Treu of Montreal was allowed to remain free pending pre-sentence recommendations by the Crown and defence May 4.

Sessions Court Judge Luc Trudel pronounced the guilty verdict but did not read the judgment, saying its contents referred to evidence heard at the closed-door trial and were not privileged.

Treu, designer of a ground-to-air surveillance and communications system for NATO, was charged with possession or control of documents or information he unlawfully retained in 1974.

MAIL BAGS TRACED HIS ROUTE

TORONTO (CP) — A driver of a mail truck drove 80 kilometres Wednesday before he realized bags of mail had been falling from the truck along the route.

Eight Canada Post bags of first- and second-class mail bounced out on the road before the driver of the truck, working under contract, noticed.

3-Car Crash Kills Man, Driver Faces Charge

A 70-year-old West Vancouver man today was charged with criminal negligence and impaired driving in connection with a three-car collision Thursday night that killed one man and sent three others to hospital.

The crash occurred on the Pat Bay Highway near Beacon.

Police identified the dead man as Lawrence Melvin Chambers, 62, of 9940 Third Street in Sidney.

Lynwood William Ehrle appeared in provincial court this morning and elected trial by judge and jury.

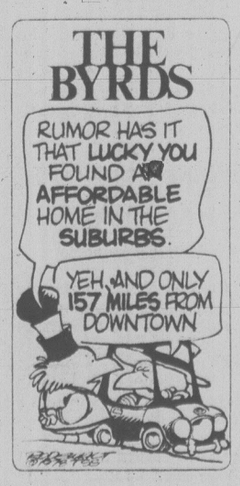
A preliminary hearing was set for Sept. 1 and he was released from custody on $1,000 bail.

Chambers was a passenger in a car driven by Herbert William Drew of 10171 West Saanich Road.

Drew, his wife, and Chambers' wife, Wilma, are reported in good condition in Saanich Peninsula Hospital.

The driver of the third car, Erin Jean Farquharson of 2268 James White Blvd. in Sidney escaped injury.

Sidney RCMP said the accident, which occurred at about 9.30 p.m. was caused when a southbound car got into the wrong lane near Beacon and collided with two northbound cars.



Food Bargains Ignored: Study

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

B.C. consumers annually spend about $2 billion on food, complain about high prices, but for the most part can't be bothered to seek out bargains.

These are some of the findings that have emerged from an intensive consumer survey of 10,000 households throughout the province.

The full report is in the hand of the legislature's select standing committee on agriculture.

From it will come some 100 mini-reports that will eventually make up a wide-ranging analysis of the agricultural situation in the province.

A second report will show at least two major supermarkets are under construction in Blaine, Wash., for the express purpose of drawing Canadian shoppers seeking cheaper U.S. foods.

Although Canadian boundary-crossing food shopping trips have declined in recent months with the falling Canadian dollar, investors in the supermarkets are counting on two factors to reverse the trend.

First, they predict the Canadian dollar will recover over the long haul, but more important, Washington State plans to remove its sales tax on food this summer.

The consumer survey has also found that while consumers are angry about food prices — especially eggs, milk and meat — they place the blame firmly on the shoulders of the middle-man, not the farmer.

But high prices or not, convenience is more important than bargains when it comes to food shopping.

Parking space and nearness of the outlet play a greater role in the choice of food market than prices, and advertising doesn't appear to have much effect in overriding the convenience factor.

B.C. consumers spend about 14 cents of their income dollar on groceries and another four cents on restaurant food.

The income percentage spent on food has remained consistent over the past five or six years.

Other data being studied by the agriculture committee show that 50 per cent of the meat consumed in the U.S. is in the form of hamburger.

In B.C. it's about 30 per cent but rising.

The chairman of the agriculture committee, Len Bawtree (Socred—Shuswap) said the provincial hamburger consumption percentage will eventually equal that of the U.S.

Firemen Vote Strike

Victoria firemen took a tough stand in their contract dispute with the city and voted Thursday night for a limited type of strike action.

Union secretary-treasurer Paul Hansen said the 85-per-cent strike vote came after the members "turned thumbs down" on a new proposal from the city.

The 115 firefighters today served 72-hour strike notice but will not be able to take any action for more than a week as another meeting involving mediator Clark Gilmour has been set for next Thursday.

No strike action is allowed until a mediator has withdrawn from a dispute and filed a report with the labor minister.

Carl Anshelm, negotiator for the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association which bargains for the city, met with the firemen Thursday.

He suggested both sides withdraw all unresolved matters and the only change in the firemen's contract, which expired Dec. 31, 1977, be a four-per-cent increase in salary.

Hansen said the firemen were unanimous in rejecting "this offer."

The firemen have designed a three-phase strike plan whereby they would report for work and respond to all emergencies, providing life-and-limb protection.

However, in the first phase, for example, certain commercial areas in the city would be designated as "struck areas" and once the firemen were assured the buildings had been evacuated, fire control lines would be pulled back to the borders of the area.

This policy would not apply to hotels, apartment blocks or hospitals.

If the firemen got into the other two phases the policy would apply on a progressive basis to residential areas.

The firemen are seeking a six-per-cent increase in a one-year contract, the maximum allowable under the federal anti-inflation guidelines.

Anshelm said in a prepared statement Thursday that such an increase plus the other reclassifications, sick leave increases and costly premiums being sought by the Victoria group would make them the highest paid firefighters in B.C.

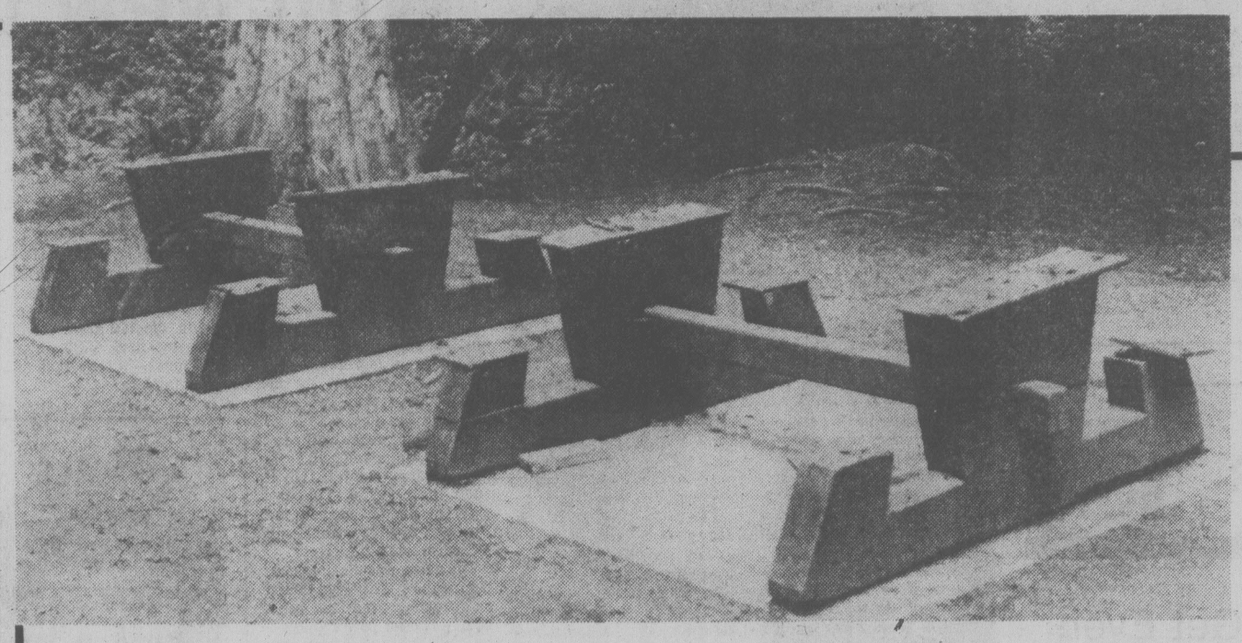
He said other public sector unions in the Greater Victoria area have settled for four per cent and Saanich firemen are only entitled to that amount in their 1978 contract, still to be negotiated.

If the city was to grant the six-per-cent increase for this year, the salary of a first-class firefighter would go to $1,575 a month, a 49.3 per cent increase from what it was in 1974. The cost of living only went up 42 per cent in that period.

Hansen countered by pointing out that Anshelm was including five salary increases in that comparison but inflation rate increases for only four years.

He also disagreed with the point about the Saanich firemen, saying they are entitled to 5.5 per cent this year.

As for the four-per-cent increase Anshelm claims the other unions got, Hansen said the Canadian Union of Public Employees settled for a cost-of-living clause in their agreement and that was only scrapped because of changes at the federal level.



Picnic tables denuded of tops and benches stand as stark evidence of vandalism at John Dean Park

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Consider the picnic table, the big, solid kind which is a standard feature of B.C. provincial parks.

It's valued at about $200 and it's both attractive and useful. Built of prime cedar, with table-top planks a hefty three and a half inches thick, and bolted to a concrete base, it's also seemingly indestructible.

One would think that aside from a coat of varnish now and then, such a table might last for centuries with little or no maintenance.

And so it probably would — if only the amateur demolition crews would leave it alone.

For these yahoos, the picnic table represents nothing more than a challenge to muscle and determination.

Equipped with crowbars, machetes, chainsaws, axes and other handy tools, they systematically destroy, mutilate and burn scores every year.

They also get their kicks by felling trees, tearing down signs, wrenching doors off campsite buildings, smashing toilets and numerous other acts of vandalism.

Most of the havoc occurs in the early spring, before gatehouse control and the presence of campers act as a deterrent, and the ever-worsening problem is particularly prevalent in parks close to urban centres.

"As far as I'm concerned it's getting to crisis proportions," a frustrated parks branch official told the Times this week.

"I don't have enough people to put things back together and the morale of my parks crew is deteriorating," said Malahat district superintendent Don Carruthers.

"They put a lot of pride into their work, getting the parks into first-class shape, only to see everything wiped out by this kind of senseless destruction."

Carruthers is responsible for 20 parks in the southern part of Vancouver Island between Duncan and Victoria, including the lower Gulf Islands.

Last year his district's bill just for repairing the damage caused was more than $10,000, about one-third of the figure for the whole province-wide parks system.

But that represents only the tip of the financial iceberg because it doesn't include travel time, vehicle operation and other costs.

For example, patrol and security staff (who often combine ticket collecting, routine maintenance and similar duties) required a salary bill for all parks last year of around $200,000.

Carruthers said in this region the vandals tend to select as their main targets about half a dozen parks including Goldstream, Bamberton, Montague Harbor (on Galiano Island) and Prior Centennial Park (on North Pender).

The Saanich Peninsula's John Dean Park "is getting hit at least once a month — they've just taken it apart again," he added.

Ray Lowrey, chief of operations for the parks branch, says the culprits are mostly teen-agers primed with beer or drugs. Some are as young as 13 or 14.

The schools' spring break and the long Easter weekend are the worst times, he adds, when gangs of youngsters descend on the parks for all-night drinking and wrecking sessions.

"We end up being baby sitters," complains Carruthers. "People come and dump their kids off, expecting us to keep an eye on them. And if the kids get into trouble, their parents are nowhere to be found."

But Lowrey and Carruthers agree the causes of the problem are far more complex than simple parental neglect, rooted as they are in the basic ills of our present society.

They note that the parks branch tries to stress prevention, with a program in which staff members visit schools to talk to Grade 5 and 6 students about B.C.'s flora and fauna and urge respect for our natural environment.

However, they are realistic enough not to expect such a program to produce any short-term solutions to the vandalism scourge, which in the last decade has infectedprovincial and state parks and campsites throughout North America.

When they recall that the parks branch had no patrol staff before 1970, it's a surprising reminder of how recent the problem is. Now, there are about 30 on Vancouver Island alone.

The strength is nowhere near adequate but Lowrey points out that a patrolman earns $1,200 a month and budget restrictions make more hirings an impossible dream.

Two patrolmen are assigned to each of the local trouble spots, temporary reinforcements are moved in for the peak weekends and the branch praises the "fantastic" job done by the RCMP.

But still the vandals seem to escape largely undetected, confining their activities to hours when no one else is likely to be around.

As Lowrey observed: "They don't like witnesses to their vandalism."

Occasionally, though, the harassed parks officials taste sweet revenge.

With some relish, Lowrey relates the anecdote of the mountain goat, a big wooden figure carved by staff at the branch's Langford workshop.

On a stonework base it towers above the Jasper-Prince George highway on the Alberta-B.C. border, where the goats abound.

A chainsaw-wielding type scaled the 20-foot structure one night and neatly decapitated it.

A month or so later he evidently tried the same thing — unaware that the new goat's wooden exterior now concealed a long reinforcing metal rod. He was able to make a gash in the neck, but nothing more.

The circumstances surrounding the discovery, and the effect on the guy holding the chainsaw, aren't known. But parks officials savour the moment in their imagination.

Fired RJH Director Plans Legal Action

William Chaster — fired Thursday as Royal Jubilee's director of financial services — met with his lawyer today to plan legal action against the hospital.

He was dismissed, Chaster claims, because he wanted to give complete information on the hospital's operation to its managing board.

Chaster, an accountant and management analyist, says he was given six weeks' severance pay after being called in from sick leave and fired.

For the past two years, he said, he has been working on an advanced computer system for the hospital.

Chaster claims the system, if implemented, will greatly improve the hospital's administration which he said is inefficient and outdated.

"I had hoped to bring this hospital, which is a taxpayer's place, out of the 1950s and into the 1970s," he said.

"I think I can say without boasting that I have been in the forefront in the design and implementation of this system."

Chaster said he had asked board members at a meeting of the hospital's finance committee about four weeks ago what kind of information they would like from the computer system.

"I was subsequently roundly castigated by the administration for doing this. I was told the board should only be told what the administration thinks it should be told," he said.

Chaster said he was told he was unable to get along with the hospital's managing group and had exceeded his authority. He denied both allegations.

"My authority has never been specified and I have been doing it for the past two years."

He said he will run for the hospital's board of directors at the next meeting.

"If I sit on the board they had better watch out because I know too much."

RJH executive director Dr. A.C.Pickles said today he understands Chaster is taking the matter to court.

"I gather from this morning's paper that Mr. Chaster plans legal action against the hospital so it is in the courts that the facts should and will emerge."

Bomb Scare

Students and staff at Colquitz Junior High School, 320 Brunswick, were evacuated from the building Thursday afternoon following a bomb threat.

A Saanich police spokesman said a person phoned at 2:28 p.m. to say a bomb would go off within 15 minutes.

A search of the school was carried out but nothing extraordinary was found.

It was the second bomb threat of the day in the Victoria area.

The 9 a.m. sailing of the Queen of Esquimalt out of Tsawwassen was cancelled after two elderly bus passengers thought they overheard a couple of youths talk about planting a bomb in the ship's engine room.

RCMP bomb squad members searched the ship but failed to come up with a bomb.

15% Tourist Hike Due

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria is heading for a record tourist season, an increase of at least 15 per cent over last year, Visitors Information Centre president Ted Balderson said today.

He said an estimate by Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy that the increase could be 25 per cent "seems a little optimistic."

However, a 15 per cent increase is a very realistic forecast, based on the tourist flow in the first four months, he said.

"It is beginning to look very good. The year began a little slowly but everyone is having a good April. The tourists are starting to arrive."

The influx should reach a peak in July with the arrival of the tall ships and August will be busy as well, especially with the overflow from Seattle where the King Tut treasures are on display all summer.

He said the Tut display will bring exceptionally large crowds to Washington State and many will come over to Victoria during the summer.

"There is no doubt the number of tourists here will increase 15 per cent. That is a realistic goal."

The Visitors Information Centre will spend $120,000 on external promotion this year to attract tourists here.

This is up from $100,000 in 1977, the first year of the external advertising program.

Balderson said the budget for 1979 is tentatively set at $200,000 for external promotion.

"That is the kind of money we need to do a really first-class job. We want to place Victoria displays in the windows of California travel agents and it has to be a first-class presentation. You can put in a third-class display and the people will just walk on by."

This year the budget is being used to advertise Victoria and to prepare two brochures, one to send to those writing Victoria for tourist information and the other to hand out to visitors when they arrive.

BALDERSON
... April good

The one being mailed out of town will stress the importance of staying several days in Victoria, not just a single afternoon.

Balderson said the Causeway tourist bureau is busy generating publicity in travel magazines and general newspapers, including recent articles in the Toronto press.

In additon there are paid advertisements in west coast magazines.

"These articles and advertisements, which are already appearing, will produce written enquiries and that's what the new brochures are for. The whole program is starting to come together."

The accent is on tourists rather than conventions because local facilities are not large enough to handle large meetings.

To raise funds for next year's promotions, the Visitors Information Centre will begin selling Victoria trade dollars, starting May 15. This year's goal is to surpass last year's sale of $110,000.

The Causeway bureau also got a grant of $24,000 from the city, down from $28,000 last year but adequate because the city also gave $10,000 to the Vancouver Island Publicity Bureau and the VIC has access to some of that funding through joint promotions.

RUMORS PUT TANKS ON BAMBERTON SITE

Rumors that Victoria's oil tank farm might be shifted to the Bamberton cement factory site on Saanich Inlet has started a flurry of activity among peninsula residents.

Central Saanich Ratepayers Association president George Lamont said today a formal resolution proposing that Saanich Inlet be declared a marine park will be brought forward at a meeting May 10.

Lamont said the organization has heard of no definite plans for the Bamberton site, which is owned by Genstar Ltd., but because the cement factory is facing an imminent phase-out, concern over future use of the location is growing.

"I've heard that the (Inner Harbor) tank farm might be moved there ... Of course we've got to have tank farms — the Island's got to have oil brought in — but not in a sensitive place like that."

Capital Regional District public works committee chairman Charlie Perkins said that there has been some talk of moving the tank farm to Saanich Inlet, but so far it has been just that — talk.

Removal of the tank farm is called for in provincial and regional Inner Harbor beautification plans.

Saanich Inlet resident, biologist and former fishing guide Jim Gilbert says he has heard that the Bamberton location might be used as a tank farm site or for other industrial purposes.

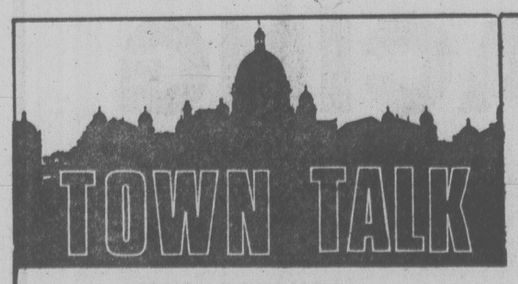
"Genstar may soon be moving out of Bamberton and there are rumors circulating," said Gilbert. "There's no way, shape or form that we want tankers running into the Inlet."

Central Saanich recently rejected Genstar's proposals for a major housing development on Todd Inlet.

Gilbert said that Saanich Inlet was declared a sports fishing reserve 40 years ago and marine park designation would merely be an extension of that.

Howard Schesser of the Cowichan Valley Regional District's public works and planning department said no proposals for future use of the Bamberton site have come to his office.

Bamberton, which is immediately across the Inlet from Brentwood Bay, falls within the CVRD's jurisdiction.



When municipal politicians weary of the criticism and carping often directed at them from taxpayers, businessmen, the press, where do they recharge their batteries?

Service club luncheons seem to be the place. Victoria mayor Mike Young and Saanich chief magistrate Mel Couvelier were guests at the last Rotary club meeting in the city.

The club's bulletin also says Ald. Murray Glazier was one of the "galaxy of VIPs at the head table." He spoke briefly, then was followed by Young "who with humor and dexterity" introduced Couvelier.

Saanich's mayor, the Rotarians tell us, "despite the short time in the mayor's chair, displayed amazing knowledge of his municipality ... one could not help but be impressed with his sincerity and dedication."

Next week, when Rotarians are in a less critical mood ...

The spicy East Indian cuisine of Victoria's Shah Jahan Restaurant continues to win national acclaim.

For the fourth straight year, the Fort Street restaurant's menu has been judged exceptional and received a coveted five-star rating in the "other nationalities" category of the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association.

The association's plaque was awarded during its Host Ex '78 show in Toronto.

Victoria should have an anti-smoking bylaw to stop people from puffing in public places, according to the United Non-Smokers Society of Richmond. In a letter to city hall the society has offered to help out in drafting just such a bylaw to control "indoor air pollution by smokers."

The organization argues that any steps taken to discourage smoking will benefit everyone.

Fighting Continues In Kabul

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — More fighting was reported today in Kabul, the capital of Afghanistan, despite broadcast claims that rebel troops led by an air force commander had "eliminated" President Mohammed Daoud.

Afghanistan's borders and airports closed, and all commercial communication channels were cut. But Western diplomats in New Delhi said their embassies in Kabul reported that about 200 bodies were seen in the streets.

There was no report on the situation in the important military centres of Kandhar and Harat, and one diplomat commented: "To seize Kabul is not to seize Afghanistan. Resistance in the form of guerrilla warfare could continue for months."

The rebels led by Lt. Gen. Dagarwal Abdul Qadir launched the coup Thursday with tanks and jet fighters, ringing key government buildings and capturing the defence ministry, the diplomats said.

Fierce fighting raged through the night in sections of the city where two army divisions are based, the sources reported. By sunrise it had subsided somewhat but small-arms fire could still be heard.

Meanwhile, the air force's Soviet Su-7 fighters fired rockets down Darulaman Road in the centre of the city toward the justice ministry and the headquarters of the army central corps. The informants said the planes encountered heavy anti-aircraft fire, and one plane was shot down.

A heavy pall of smoke hung over the city of 500,000, and no civilians were seen out of doors, the sources said. Rebel troops surrounded some Western embassies and refused to permit diplomats to leave their compounds.

Diplomats in New Delhi had no concrete information on the fate of the 69-year-old president, who took over the government in a military coup in 1973, or his family. But the news announced on Radio Afghanistan today declared: "Daoud is gone forever. Daoud has been eliminated forever by the will of the people of Afghanistan."

Unconfirmed reports said the former royal palace in which the president lived had been reduced to rubble by fire from 50 tanks.

A broadcast said the new Military Revolutionary Council was abolishing the 1977 constitution.

Claiming that the council controlled all military camps and bases, the broadcast said public gatherings were banned, an 8 p.m.-to-dawn curfew had been imposed and all laws would be made by the council.

Abdul Qadir said in an earlier broadcast that "for the first time power has come into the hands of the people."

"The last remnant of imperialism and tyranny of the Mohammedzai has been put to an end," he declared.

KOREAN BOATS CLASH

SEOUL (Reuter) — South Korean patrol boats today sank a North Korean spy boat off the south coast in a brief clash which left at least three persons dead, the South Korean defence ministry reported.

The ministry's Anti-Espionage Command said two North Koreans and one from the south were killed in the 10-minute exchange of fire. Two South Koreans were wounded.

The command said the appearance of the 10-ton North Korean boat was a sign that the north might start a new campaign to send agents to the south after a lull that has lasted several months.

Carter Gas Ration Plan Ready

WASHINGTON (AP) — A standby gasoline rationing plan expected to be announced next week by the Carter administration would distribute fuel in a national emergency based on the number of cars a business or family owns, congressional sources say.

Rationing is not being advocated by the administration at this time. However, a 1975 law requires a rationing plan to be on hand in the event of a national energy emergency.

Under the proposal, the more cars an individual, family or business owns, the more coupons that could be obtained. The plan does not spell out how much gasoline would be allotted for each car, other than to say the car's fuel economy would be a factor.

Energy Department officials recently briefed Senate staff members on the plan. A summary copy of the plan was obtained by Associated Press Radio.

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger frequently has said that the administration views rationing as an unattractive option—one that would be considered only in an emergency or as a last resort.

The Carter plan differs markedly from one submitted by former president Ford in January, 1977, shortly before he left office. It would have based gasoline coupon allotments on the number of drivers licences in a family.

A memo prepared by Max Friedersdorf, director of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, questions the fairness of the Carter plan.

"If you can afford to own several cars, does that mean you should be allocated more gasoline during a shortage than someone who may be able to afford only one car?" Friedersdorf asked.

His memo also said that persons might buy old junk cars just to enable them to purchase more gasoline.

Once Carter's plan is formally submitted, Congress must act on it within 60 days. If he—or a future president—decides to activate the plan, either house of Congress has 15 days in which to disapprove it.

Through a bureaucratic quirk in the Senate, Ford's rationing plan was never formally received on Capitol Hill and the 60-day period never began. Carter withdrew the Ford plan, and the administration has been working on its own version ever since.

Under the Ford administration, 4.8 billion coupons, each entitling the bearer to five gallons of gasoline, were printed and stored at a cost of $12 million. Sources said the Carter plan would require printing new coupons at about the same cost.

WEIGH 'EM, or count 'em, assistant bank manager Bruce Hogg appears to be thinking as he scratches his head. The load of copper — 30,000 pennies all neatly wrapped — were brought into a Toronto bank by Russell Plastic (right). He exchanged the pennies for $300, which he plans to spend on a European vacation. It took him four years of scrounging to save the coppers.

Blob-Dropping Airplane Subject of U.S. Search

WASHINGTON — U.S. Federal Aviation Administration officials said Thursday they are trying to find the airplane with the leaky lavatory that is responsible for the 25-pound green blob of frozen waste that landed in Ripley, Tenn., Sunday.

What some residents of that small community thought was an unidentified flying object is evidence the FAA has not completely solved the leaky lavatory problem, despite taking the firm action of revising its handbook in 1974 after an engine was ripped off a jetliner because of a similar incident.

"This is more excitement than we've had in this little town in a long time," said Debbie Crowell, a dispatcher in the sheriff's office of Tennessee's Lauderdale County. The blob, she said, "has been taken care of. It had a nice little odor to it. We sent a three-ounce sample over to the University of Tennessee laboratory."

The blob landed outdoors, near an unused school building. The blob was first placed in a deep freeze in the sheriff's office until the phenomenon was explained by the FAA's regional office in Memphis.

"This is not supposed to happen," said the FAA's Fred Farrar. "But it's nothing new. We've had 'em crash into people's kitchens."

If there is a leak to the outside in airplane lavatory plumbing, the liquid will freeze in the sub-zero temperatures of high-altitude flying. If the leak continues, the blob grows in size until it either falls off of its own weight, is shaken off by the plane's vibration, or comes unglued as the plane descends into warmer temperatures.

The worst year for falling blobs was 1974, when 14 incidents were reported in the United States. On several occasions blobs penetrated the roofs of residences. No known personal injuries have resulted, Farrar said.

Israel Hints at New Moves

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance ended two days of talks Thursday with signs of possible Israeli movement on some aspects of the stalled Middle East peace negotiations.

Dayan told reporters he must consult Prime Minister Menachem Begin and possibly the rest of the cabinet on "clarifications" of the Israeli negotiating position. The matters in question are believed to include practical details of Begin's "self-rule" plan for the West Bank and Gaza strip, and arrangements for a form of Palestinian self-determination there after the end of a five-year interim period.

Dayan is considered to be more flexible, at least in diplomatic formulations, than Begin and at this point is the preferred U.S. negotiating partner. Dayan is to meet Begin Sunday in New York at the start of the prime minister's weeklong trip across the United States to celebrate the 30th anniversary of Israel's founding.

Due to the active state of the negotiations, Begin's visit to Washington Monday has been upgraded from the purely ceremonial. According to Israeli sources, substantive talks with Vance at the state department have been added to the schedule for Monday morning and at least a brief substantive discussion with President Jimmy Carter at the White House is expected.

There was no indication of a major breakthrough, but some indications of possible progress on some details. Vance cautiously declined to say, after meeting with Dayan, whether he was more optimistic than before.

Egyptian-Israeli negotiations have been hung up for weeks on a sweeping "statement of principles" involving Israeli withdrawal and self-determination for the Palestinians. Having failed to resolve the issues in their broad dimension, the United States is seeking to renew the momentum by focussing on the details of the on-the-ground arrangements which underlie the principles.

Mister Candyman portrayed by Leon Bibb

Leon Bibb to Star In Mr. Candyman

"The Blues is a deep-down music, a music you hear in your soul long before it gets to your ears . . ."

The speaker? A character who's been there and back, stepping out of the pages of musical history, from the roaring twenties to the swinging seventies. It's Mister Candyman, as played by the multi-faceted actor/singer Leon Bibb in the unusual CBC-TV Superspecial of the same name on Monday, May 1 at 9 p.m. on Channels 2 and 6.

Mister Candyman is a 'first' from the network's variety department. As portrayed by Leon Bibb, he is the embodiment of all who have experienced that endless lonesome feeling, that bittersweet heart-sickness, that state of mind known as the Blues. He is also, as Peter Wilson of the Vancouver Sun put it, "a street-wise character, clued in on the foibles and follies of mankind." At his hands, and through his eyes, viewers are guided through the varied aspects of the Blues: how they started, the directions they took, musically, and how they changed into the Blues that we know today. But, as to exactly what the Blues are? Well, as Mister Candyman tells us — "You just can't define what happens as to why the Blues arrive . . . But you sure do know when they do."

Mister Candyman is based on an idea by Leon Bibb, derived from a solo concert he did at Vancouver's Orpheum Theatre last year. He took his idea to CBC-TV variety head Jack McAndrew, and out of their productive collaboration came the birth of the Blues — for television.

"The Blues is a part of livin', a part of lovin' ". . .

Shaped and moulded by blues-lovers producer Marv Terhoch and director Bob Weinstein (both of Winnipeg), and taped in Vancouver, Mister Candyman conjures up a stream-of-Blues-consciousness with strong video imagery and a distinct theatrical flair. Whether Leon is tattered and shackled in the sweltering heat (Rocks and Gravel), or being the regretful street-sweeper (C. C. Rider) or the road-gang railroad worker (Early in the Morning), the essence of the Blues comes through: Pain, in its various guises and disguises; and what a lesson Mister Candyman teaches us all . . .

Leon Bibb is ably supported by singers Rosalind Keene (Ma Rainey in Backwater Blues, Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child) and Cal Dodd, (St. Louis Woman, Skillet Good and Greasy), the keyboard stylings of pianist Sta Keen (Sophisticated Lady, Blues in the Night) and the big band sound of the Tommy Banks Orchestra.

PATSY NOW SHOW'S STAR

Patsy Gallant won the Juno Award last month for Best Vocalist of the Year. Then she won the Juno Award for Best Single of the Year.

She's also a singing sensation and she hosts a rocking hour of music May 5 on CBC-TV's Canadian Express. Producer Bernard Picard, fresh from his triumphant Superspecial with Andre Gagnon, says this show is the fastest hour show on CBC-TV. "It's so full of entertainment," says Picard, "you won't be able to leave the room for a glass of water."

Picard said, "Patsy is the star of the show. I think Canadian viewers will be surprised at her versatility."

Cousteau Seeking Legendary Island

Captain Jacques Cousteau and Philippe Cousteau explore one of the world's great unsolved mysteries — the lost island of Atlantis, where legends say an advanced civilization abruptly vanished from the face of the earth thousands of years ago in a violent cataclysm — in The Cousteau Odyssey, Calypso's Search for Atlantis over Public TV 9. Part I of the two-hour special airs Monday, May 1, at 8 p.m. and Part II follows Tuesday, May 2, at 8 p.m. The adventure will be rebroadcast in its entirety Saturday, May 6, at 8 p.m. on Channel 9.

The idea of Atlantis has captivated the imaginations of explorers, archaeologists and scholars, who have searched for the lost civilization in all the oceans of the world, claiming to find evidence on Easter Island, Coco Island, Bimini in the Bahamas, the Canary Islands, the Azores, the Atlas mountains in Morocco, and even in Helgoland in the North Sea. But many theorists have pointed to the Aegean Sea as the most likely locale to have inspired the Atlantis myth.

In Calypso's Search for Atlantis, Jacques Cousteau concentrates on sites in the Aegean; in particular Crete and its outlying islands — Dia, Pseira and the volcanic island 75 miles to the North, Santorini, also called Thera.

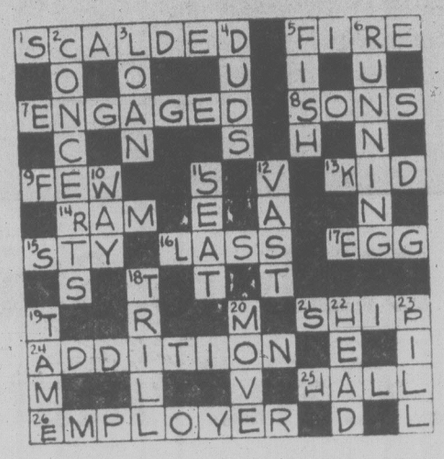
PAYOFF PUZZLE

Correct Answers to Last Week's Puzzle



CLUES ACROSS:

1. SCALDED not scolded. To scold would be a matter of telling him, not of his "learning," as from experience (e.g., of being SCALDED.)

5. FIRE not firm. As suggested, a FIRE will receive more or less publicity. A firm will normally publicize itself.

7. ENGAGED not enraged. Being ENGAGED with his duties and busy, he is quite liable to be reluctant to have visitors. Being enraged about something shouldn't have any direct effect on receiving visitors.

8. SONS not sins. "Critical" of his SONS; but, rather, remorseful about his sins.

9. FEW not new. If people are really gullible, new tricks are not necessary; a FEW old ones will suffice.

13. KID not aid. He certainly wouldn't want them to KID him, but he mightn't be too proud to want aid.

14. RAM not rat. "Coming upon" sounds like an encounter while on a country walk, favoring RAM. Also, "the right circumstances" doesn't fit a rat which can leap out and give a fright at any time.

16. LASS not lads. Not being cut out to cope with mother's housewifely "chores," good lads may well help in other ways.

24. ADDITION not audition. An audition is a matter of performing well; there may not be any absolute "right" or wrong, as there is in an ADDITION.

25. HALL not wall. A "wall" is just a comparatively vague constructional part; it doesn't denote an actual "place," in a sense suitable to the gist of the clue, as satisfactorily as "HALL."

26. EMPLOYER not employee. While every EMPLOYER will not have the "same" ideas, every employee will not necessarily have any ideas on the subject.

CLUES DOWN:

2. CONCERTS not converts. As suggested, religious CONCERTS are more some people's meat than others'. One may doubt, on the other hand, if actual converts are of interest as such; it is rather that certain people are interested in making converts.

3. LOAN not load. The clue is better suited to that which necessarily can be considered "in terms of responsibility." Also, since a load is nothing but a burden anyway, the distinction made by the first four words of the clue has more point for LOAN.

5. FISH not fist. The question of the number of bones relates to the hand as an anatomical part, rather than to the clenched "fist" as such.

11. SEAT not heat or meat. Apart from the fact that a certain number of people are vegetarians, meat is more in the nature of a luxury than a "comfort." SEAT is more firmly apt than heat, which is sometimes oppressive.

12. VAST not past. Even the most extreme eccentric "could seem normal enough" at a given time; but a man whose eccentricity is past, is now normal.

19. TAME not take. To "take wild animals" is not a definite thing to do, in the sense of a circus speciality.

SOAP OPERA SCENE

She's Still Spinning

By STEVEN SCHEUER

NEW YORK — Leslie Denniston, who plays the mystery lady known as Karen Parker-Peters in "As the World Turns," is anything but a mystery in real life. She's an open, lovely, energetic young woman who planned on being a ballerina since she was a four-year-old toddler but somehow ended up as an actress-singer-dancer.

Leslie's father took her to see "The Nutcracker" when she was a tot and in her own words, she was "hooked" from that day on. Ballet classes in San Francisco, and later Palo Alto, Calif., where her family moved, took precedence over everything else. Whenever Leslie worked in recitals, she was singled out for her excellence and no one doubted that the ballet whirl was going to be her world.

After high school, however, instead of heading for New York and one of the celebrated ballet schools, Leslie went off to Paris to study with Roland Petit. While in Europe, she fell in with a group of singer-performers who used to get together and sing for their own pleasure. This led to stints in clubs and a tour in Europe. However, because she was getting further and further away from ballet, she returned home overweight and slightly unhappy.

But, not the type to tay down long, Leslie pulled herself up, dropped the extra pounds, and headed for New York and work in the theatre. Although she found agents cool to newcomers without track records, Leslie took matters into her own hands and called on producers personally. One of them, Philip Rose, had her try out for a role in the broadway musical "Shenandoah." She won the part and played it on Broadway for almost a year.

Wanting to stay in New York and pursue a career in the theatre, Leslie sought a job in soaps. Her luck held out and she landed her current role in "As the World Turns."

"I've been lucky and I have no complaints. I love doing 'World' and I'm learning a great deal,' she said.

Leslie may not be giving Markova a run for her money, but the ballet world's loss is soap opera's gain.

PLOT PORTENTS. Lorraine's daughter Donna is turning into a trouble-maker not even juvenile authorities would care to handle on "Days of Our Lives." Donna has Mom's number, and is merciless. Things are looking up for Don and his state senate campaign . . . will marriage to Marlena be next?

Lorie's book continues to be a major plotting device on "The Young and the Restless," though it's become somewhat of a bore. Sensitive Leslie carries on, certain the book will ruin her musical career, but we all know Leslie is tougher than that. Meanwhile, Snapper, back at the hospital again, is developing a yen for the new lady doctor, Casey Reed.

Miles makes plans to leave Monticello in "Edge of Night." Mike Karr is reinstated to the Crime Commission, and Raven is not going through with the planned abortion but is set to take off for Europe.

On "Ryan's Hope," Siobahn gets arrested, renewing the tension between Johnny and Jack, while Pat and Faith exchange longing glances, but verbally agree to keep their distance. Devious Delia disappears without a trace.

Kelly arrives in Pine Valley and throws Linc for a loop in "All My Children." Dr. David Thornton accidentally poisons himself instead of his wife Edna and an investigation begins, with the finger of suspicion pointing to Christina Karras.

Luke shows up in Llanview looking for Becky in "One Life to Live." While Cathy gets ready to blow the whistle on Brad, desperate Pat is ready to consult a parapsychologist in order to try to reach her dead son, Brian.

A few weeks ago I was asking for advice on how to preserve old newspapers. There were a number of replies including one from D. A. Jarvis of Dundas, Ont. It involves a complicated chemical treatment process which emanates from McMaster Unversity Document Preservation and Restoration section and is, therefore, presumably reliable. I still have some reservations as to how well it would work on something as flimsy as an old newspaper but it is doubtless good for more substantial documents. I'd be glad to send a copy to anyone who sends me a stamp.

We were talking about commatelists — people who collect post office cancellations. The Post Office is now offering prizes for designers of a special cancellation which will be used by the National Postal Museum when it moves to its new premises. Entries must be in black and white. The design can be any shape up to 200mm in size for eventual reduction to a cancellation to fit within the space of a circle not more than 50 mm in diameter. Dates must be incorporated in the design in the order of year, month and then day — arabic numerals being used for the day and year, and roman numerals for the month.

The first prize is a National Postal Museum presentation book (now a collector's item) plus $100 credit on tiems sold in the museum. There are seven other lesser prizes all of interest to philatelists. Entries should be submitted to The National Postal Musuem, Confederation Heights, Ottawa, K1A 0B1, not later than September 1st., 1978.

Mrs. O. Barrett of Salford, Ont. sends a photograph of an exquisite antique vase and asks if it is Wedgwood. Well it looks like Wedgwood — but that's not very useful. If it is then you ought to be able to find the word Wedgwood somewhere on the base, incised in the original clay. I mention this for the benefit of other doubtful Wedgwood owners. The word is sometimes so small that I have known collectors who did not find it until they had owned the piece for years — and then only accidently. Try a good magnifying glass.

T. R. Swanson of Burnaby, B.C. asks how old a fruit jar has to be before it is valuable.

The question does not hang together. Age has very little to do with the trading price of old fruit jars; it is rarity that counts. The first fruit jars made in Canada were probably turned out by the Hamilton Glass Works somewhere around 1865 and those earliest specimens are most certainly collector's tiems of a Escape from Zahrain, on 11 at 1 p.m. Adventure movie about escaping prisoners, set in a desert. Yul Brynner and Sal Mineo (1963).

Eyewitness Returns

There is no fantasy, just cold, hard fact, as you hitch a ride on a jetliner bound for disaster, sit in judgment in a court that must decide if a male can be a prostitute, or take a front row seat at a trial where man attempts to delineate the boundary between life and death. Like in an uncanny time machine, you will step back into recent history, and everything about the events — the characters, the dialogue and the drama — will be just as it was. Eyewitness, accurately recreating spectacular news events in docu-dramas, returns Tuesday, May 2, at 10 p.m. on Public TV 9.

The first Eyewitness dramatically reenacts three recent news issues: the final moments in the cockpit of a DC-9 jetliner as the pilot and co-pilot nonchanlantly navigate the plane and 82 passengers into an open field three miles short of the runway; the trial of Fred Doane, the first male ever brought to court in Massachusetts on charges of prostitution; and the emotional courtroom scene where the final ruling on the fragile euthanasia issue of Karen Quinlan is handed down.

Gigi, on 5 at 3 p.m. Lerner and Loewe's original musical, starring Leslie Caron, Louis Jourdan, Maurice Chevalier and Hermione Gingold. An enertaining movie with brilliantly staged musical numbers (1958).

Killing Stone, on 5 at 9 p.m. Drama about the experiences of an ex-con who tries to rebuild his life after spending 10 years behind bars for a crime he didn't commit. Gil Gerard, J.D. Cannon, Jim Davis and Corinne Michaels. Made for television in 1978).

high order. However, Crown were not far behind — maybe ten years later, no more — and you can pick those jars up at any flea market.

The Beehive, the Mid-West, and the Vaccuum, on the other hand all date from the 1920's and are considered quite nice pieces. It is survival that counts and the larger quantities they were made in, the more are likely still to be around. It is the jars made as a sideline and discontinued after a short period which are rare — those and variations on some of the standard themes like the amber Beaver which is worth a small fortune. Fruit jar collectors tell me that they think the last basement has been combed and all the fruit jars that survived are now in circulation.

I receive letters from time to time from readers enquiring hopefully about their 'final copy of the Toronto Telegram dated October 30, 1971'. With all due respect I must say that I think the enquiry is premature by at least a hundred years.

Even then they are not likely to be valuable. They were issued as a collector's item at the time and with so many around it seems unlikely that they can ever amount to anything. The same holds for the last Eaton's catalogue.

Readers letters should be address to Collector's Item, c/o Victoria Press, R.R. No. \, Lowbanks, Ont., N0A 1K0.

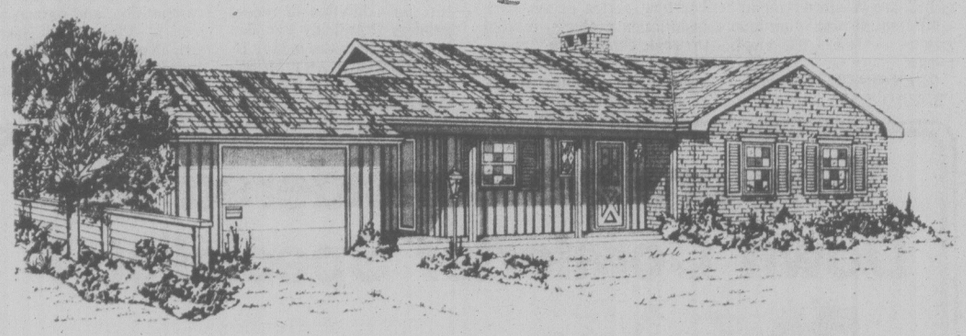
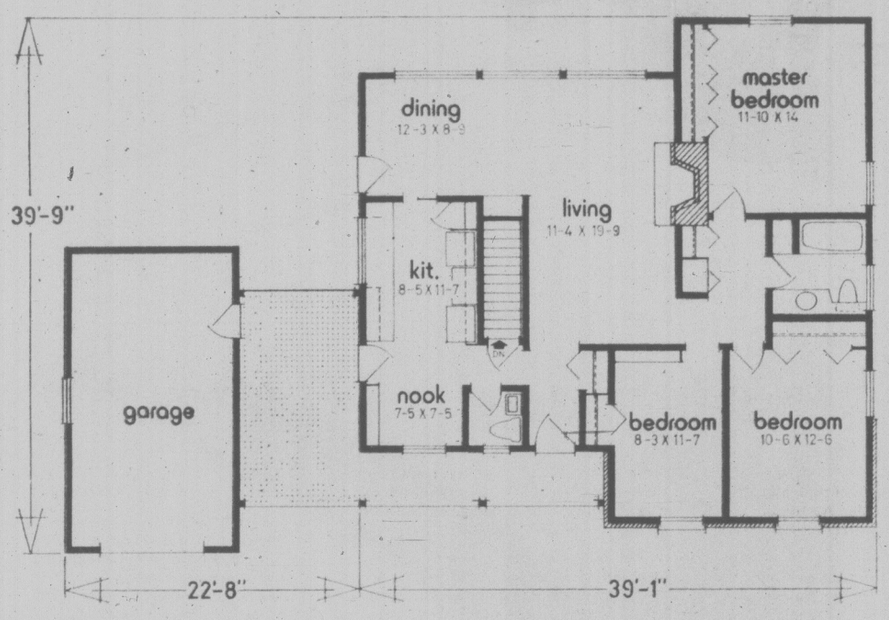
PLAN Nº 65-1256
AREA: 1248 sq. ft.
WIDTH: 61 ft. 9 in.





Spacious Ranch-Style Home

This three bedroom, full basement bungalow design is perfectly suited to the wide frontage lot and would make an excellent home for the growing family which is looking a for a combination of comfort and convenience.

The weather-sheltered portico, mixed vertical siding and brick veneer, and the shuttered windows of the exterior establish a tone reminiscent of the western ranch cottage.

The heavily-embossed front door bids you enter — directly into the main reception foyer, which opens into the large, L-shaped living-dining room combination. The living room features a wide woodburning fireplace and a long wall of rear-facing windows — perfect for rear-view lot.

The well planned galley-style kitchen is centrally positioned between the dining room and the breakfast nook, allowing good separation of formal dining and casual family meals.

A two-piece vanity bath adjoins the nook and front entrance and faces the down staircase — convenient to the heavy traffic areas of the house.

The three bedrooms are grouped around the central bath and sensibly away from the heavy traffic areas. Each has excellent natural lighting and ample closet space.

The central bathroom has a full-width countertop and a linen cupboard. The main linen closet is immediately opposite the bathroom door.

The single closed garage is separated from the house proper via covered portico, which may be finished in concrete aggregate or ceramic tiles at a later date — providing a shaded patio on hot summer days.

TV MAILBAG

By THOM MEAD

HOLLYWOOD — The TV Mailbag:

Q. I would like to know if Jimmy Durante is still alive and if he will ever be able to appear on television again? I've been one of his admirers for years. — C.B., Jefferson City, Mo.

A. Jimmy Durante is still alive at age 85. However, he is in poor health and it is highly unlikely that he will ever again appear on television.

Q. Could you please tell me how old Frank Sinatra and Robert Blake are, and where I could write fo autographed photos of them. — A.F., Victoria, British Columbia

A. Frank Sinatra is 63, while Robert Blake is 39. You might write to Sinatra in care of Palm Springs, Calif. For Blake, write to Universal Television, 100 Universal City Plaza, Universal City, Calif.

Q. How about some background information on Robert Ito, who plays Sam on "Quincy?" — M.H., Largo, Fla.

A. Robert Ito was born in Canada and got his first big break when he was in the original stage company of "What Makes Sammy Run?" He credits the late Larry Blyden, who starred in the play, as encouraging him in his acting career. He has plenty of credits, including "Flower Drum Song" and several guest roles in such series as "Six Million Dollar Man," "Kojak" and "Kung Fu."

Q. How about solving a mystery for me. "The Carol Burnett Show" is supposed to be "live" and yet, after opening her show, usually in a pretty dress, she goes into one of her sketches wearing a costume. Now, nobody can change costumes and make-up that fast. How do they do it? — B.D., Irvington, N.J.

A. Just because a show is live doesn't mean real time live. Most live shows such as "The Carol Burnett Show" are taped live. That way, the director can stop taping while scenes or costumes are changed. And if a person makes a mistake, the director simply retapes the particular scene. In television, this procedure is considered live.

Questions of general interest will be answered in the column. Volume of mail prohibits personal replies. Inquiries should be sent to Thom Mead, TV Mailbag, c/o Prevue, Box 300, Victoria, B.C. V8W 2N4.

ANDERSON . . . basic values and common sense

It's a small world, and at times it seems as if Canada is the smallest country in it. Witness the day, a half dozen years ago, when Chatelaine editor Doris Anderson came to town for a speaking engagement and took me to lunch. (As a chauffeur I was supposed to be taking her, but when Doris Anderson makes up her mind, smart people agree.) We talked about Calgary, where Doris grew up and where I had lived, and lo and behold, it turned out that Doris Anderson's aunt had been my landlady!

(And a fine landlady she was, too, ever good-humored despite extreme provocation. One night a friend who was suffering from a broken engagement drank too much on an empty stomach, passed out, and had to be put to bed on the spot. Around three a.m. she fell out of bed with a crash like doomsday. Next morning Mrs. McCubbin — who, like all good landladies, lived downstairs — insisted with a perfectly straight face that she'd slept through the whole thing.)

Now Doris Anderson, recently retired and in her mid-fifties, has published her first novel. Anyone who has observed the complacent puffery of the fashionable Toronto scene these days will fear the worst. But this novel is rooted, like Doris Anderson herself, in basic values and common sense. Two Women has already been labelled "women's trash" and "a non-novel" by the Toronto pundits. But the real truth is not so simple.

Two Women has a beautiful doll wife (Hilary) and a single-parent feminist (Julia) as its main protagonists, but it is really a whole gallery of women characters, not a portrait of only two. Anderson knows women, and though her magazine editor's habit of classifying them into types may be unfair to individuals, her general observations ring true.

Her book spans three generations, from Julia's mother Anna, who "prepared her daughter to expect little of life and to endure everything as cheerfully as possible," to Hilary's daughter Linda, who works in a "hostel for derelict women." Not surprisingly, Anderson is much interested in the moulding of the female mind, and she uses Two Women to compare social conditioning by class and era. She could have been ham-fistedly preachy, but she is not. On the subject of women she's lively, interesting and committed.

Two Women is too good to be written off as "just a women's novel." Rather, it's a social novel about women. Anderson's male characters tend to get short shrift. There's a philandering husband, a whining, self-righteous ex-husband, a precious man-about-town, a selfish, bad-tempered father, a pompous bore of a poet, a weak-kneed boss and a stupid, unscrupulous colleague, etc. etc. Only Julia's son, an engaging 15-year-old named Jeff, escapes authorial disapproval.

Anderson's lack of patience with her male characters is a weakness in the book, for the reader can hardly be expected to believe in Julia both as 1) a femme fatale outside office hours, and 2) a put-upon drudge in a man's world at work.

Two Women has other credibility gaps as well. Hilary, the beautiful doll wife, has devoted herself to her husband and children, all of whom now reject her. ("She had lived her life by one set of rules and then the rules had changed.") But Hilary's bewilderment at her situation is too much. One would think, to hear Doris Anderson go on, that Hilary had lived her entire life as a contemporary Toronto hostess without ever having read Chatelaine.

Some of the plot twists, especially near the end of the book, are equally hard to swallow. (There is one inspired surprise, however, for readers who have had the good luck not to read the wrong reviews; i.e., the ones in which some idiot gets his jollies by giving the plot away.)

Yet Two Women does have distinction, and it owes it to Doris Anderson's firm grasp on reality and pithy way with a phrase. Describing Hilary, her husband complains, "But it's that Bambi-being-crucified look I can't stand." Anna's sitting-room has a "black panther with ivy growing out of his back" and "a framed flamingo hammered out of copper that her mother had won at a bazaar." At a dull dinner party, Julia amuses herself by mentally undressing all the men.

Anderson packs more into Two Women than any book 240 pages long should contain, but as first novels go, it's a success. Perhaps next time around, when she has less to say, she'll be able to concentrate on saying it better.

TWO WOMEN, by Doris Anderson. Macmillan. $9.95.

Jack London: The Man and the Legend

By JACK SCOTT

It's to be expected, perhaps, that biographies of literary figures, notorious for their idiosyncracies, will exaggerate their personal, very often tortured lives, at the expense of the memorable books they left behind. The man behind the writer is seldom, if ever, attractive.

This, again, (as it was with recent biographies of Evelyn Waugh, James Thurber, John O'Hara, Ring Lardner, Ernest Hemingway and many other greats) is a major fault with Andrew Sinclair's life of Jack London. One of the most enduring figures of American literature, as enduring, perhaps, as Mark Twain, becomes a somewhat pathetic personality. All too often this biography deals more with London's real and imagined medical problems than with the vital prose that is still, more than 100 years after his birth, compulsive reading.

Perhaps this was inevitable. London was a much more complex man than his writings. Sinclair, who has documented the similar agonies of Dylan Thomas, can hardly be faulted for his unwitting destruction of simplistic legends.

They are many. The notion, for example, that London was an orthodox Socialist, still the best-read American novelist in the Soviet Union and a favorite of Lenin, is largely a myth. Jack was more of a Nietzschean superman, so racist that he often sounds like an early-day Nazi, a regular contributor to the capitalistic Hearst papers, single-mindedly after the affluent life and a staunch friend of the well-to-do. The Socialists unashamedly used him, but his views were, at best, confused and eventually he left their ranks. A radical he was. An articulate constructive Socialist, no.

There is the legend, too, that he was a man's man, prototype of the American romantic tough. In fact, as Sinclair shows, he was much more influenced by the women in his chaotic life, his dwarfish mother, Flora Wellman, who bore Jack illegitimately (his father was an itinerant astrologer), his first wife, the homely Bess Maddern, his second, the Amazonian Charmian Kitteredge, an attractive, athletic companion who was loyal to the end, and the not-so-secret love of his life, Anna Strunsky. If they did not actually shape his character, they were clearly crutches for a crippled personality.

His most durable books concerned the Yukon gold rush, a lifelong career that began when he was 27 with the best-sellers, Call of the Wild and White Fang.

Sinclair records that it was the end of his hack work. "Overnight," he notes, "he had won a name and now, as he had predicted, the magazines wanted him. He sent out most of his rejected manuscripts, and they were accepted. This seemed to prove his point, even if it did not help his reputation as a writer of quality. He also accepted an offer to begin contributing articles to the Hearst press, the bugaboo of the Socialists. Income was one thing, politics another. He insisted on making money in every way he could, while keeping the flame of his faith to himself."

The fact was that London was an inept failure in his own brief search for northern riches, though he was to mine his experiences for the rest of his life.

In all, he brought home just $4.50 worth of gold dust which he promptly pledged to a pawnbroker in Oakland. "He was broken in health and as penniless as most of the other Klondike adventurers." Sinclair observes. "His only excuse for his folly was the value of the hardship to his character. He must make a myth of his experience, presenting himself as a frail hero who had outlasted the worst of the winter and the wild, not a short-winded young man who had come home with his tail between his legs at the first opportunity."

While in many respects he was a genuine adventurer and, later, piloted The Snark to the South Seas and researched many of his more enduring books through personal and frequently uncomfortable involvement, he was a total hypochondriac at a time when he was writing his most robust novels.

Sinclair documents, often relentlessly, the alcoholism, dysentry, yaws, mental depression and do-it-yourself medicine that plagued London's later life. If he didn't have the ailment he invented it. That he died, at 40, of a self-administered over-dose of drugs seems only the logical ending of a tumultuous and undisciplined life.

Such detail tends to warp the perspective of a dedicated writer who, in his early days, spent 15 hours a day at his typewriter, whose output of 50-odd books have been, as the critics say, "uneven", yet 28 of them still remain in print, and a writer generally regarded as one of the lasting greats of American literature.

Curiously, though he readily admitted the influence of Rudyard Kipling on his own writing, he has been given scant credit for his own pioneering, which clearly served as an inspiration for others to follow.

"Jack had created the image of the heroic macho writer, who lived his fiction and made a fiction of his living," Sinclair acutely notes. "He behaved like the Great American Novelist, even if he had not written the Great American Novel. Those who followed his self-dramatizing style of existence and his short, jerky, bald method of writing, much as Ernest Hemingway, forget to acknowledge the inventor of the mode."

Myths and legends continue to grow about London, yet one thing is clear: He was a prodigious producer and a free spirit whose impact remains irresistable.

Perhaps Sinclair says it best: "The paradox is that he had achieved success because he was a born writer, a natural myth-maker, and a man of haunted dreams and split desires, of unconscious ferocity, divine discontent, and some genius."

JACK: A BIOGRAPHY OF JACK LONDON, by Andrew Sinclair. Fitzhenry and Whiteside. $15.95.

The Confederation Bookshelf 2

There Are Some Alternatives to Separation

By WALTER YOUNG

About the Gary Geddes and Rick Butler books there is not a great deal to be said. Gary Geddes has brought together a rather uneven collection of prose and poetry that speaks about the central issue of our confederation. It is helpful to have these pieces in one place because some of them are worth re-reading and some enjoyable for the discovery since not all of us regularly read The Albertan or the Independencer. In the case of the latter, the article by John Trent is particularly good. On the other hand, some of the material is dreadfully thin. Three pages and a bit of Walter Gordon's hand-wringing about the inevitable seems a waste. So too Rosemary Sullivan's modest note about the failure of universities to Canadianize. It is old hat now and only painful to be reminded of our folly.

Recorded on Tape

Rick Butler travelled about Quebec with microphone and tape recorder and this book is the result. The individual perceptions about the crisis of a variety of Quebecers of both languages are interesting and amusing but one doesn't know quite what to make of it all. It isn't a sample of any useful kind and the best one can say about it is that it does provide evidence of a sort that Francophone Quebecers are determined to survive and will probably have to separate to do so.

Butler doesn't say this in his conclusion but it seems clear from the conversations he records that both the bloody-mindedness of the Anglos, and the determination of the French leave room for no other solution. In fact, if any British Columbians doubt the proposition, they ought to read Butler and learn that these people at least are no longer content with the status quo.

The Simeon book is the best of the three. I hasten to add that this opinion is not a reflection of any propensity for academic log-rolling. The academics in this collection are not writing research papers for other scholars, they are instead offering essays for the general reader that reflect their assessment and judgment of the present situation.

The book is a slightly more panic-stricken sequel to One Country or Two, a collection of essays on the same subject by many of the same hands that was a product of the FLQ crisis. The fact that we have reached the present impasse may say something about the prescience of these professors seven years earlier — or that perhaps not enough people read them.

As with most collections of essays, not all in this one reach the highest standard and, as Simeon points out in the introduction, the viewpoint ranges from the optimistic to the pessimistic. The choice of words is his and it sets the tone which is, briefly, that separation is a bad thing.

But while most of the contributors express that view, a good number of them, Simeon included, nevertheless set about the distasteful business of examining the remains of a Canada without Quebec. Simeon surveys several alternative scenarios for separation; Charles Pentland explores the prospects for association after separation — and finds them gloomy, concluding that "Quebec would end up weaker and more dependent as a sovereign but associated state" than ever it was within confederation. Another article examines a favorite question in the debate — has Quebec a legal right to secede? Legally, not without the consent of Canada, but then that was the situation Ian Smith found himself in some years ago.

Periphery Problems

Without going through each essay in the collection, it is enough to say that the interested citizen will find between the covers of this book an examination of most of the major questions that arise in the continuing discussion of our fate.

It is worth noting that the book does not ignore the special interests of the other regions. And that is important, for too often the debate focuses on Quebec and the angst of Ontario without considering that there are interests on the periphery that must be served, and that have perhaps been too frequently ignored while the centre tries to solve a problem which, in some respects, is not the same problem for the West or East.

Ron Burns suggests that while British Columbia is less than enthusiastic about the meddling of the 'feds' in provincial affairs, there is no evidence of any strong desire to become the 51st state. He reminds us that there is less official traffic between Victoria and Olympia than between our capital and Tokyo. Indeed, when Dan Evans was governor of Washington state, he was much more anxious to forge links than either Dave Barrett or Bill Bennett.

Special Status

The election of Claude Ryan as leader of Quebec's Liberal party adds a new dimension to this subject. Unfortunately the federal election will be upon us before the significance of his presence on the scene is fully understood. Too many voters will assume that being a Liberal he shares the views of the prime minister about Quebec and confederation, and that between the two of them the old country can be saved. That, however, is not the case.

Unlike the prime minister, Ryan is a Quebec nationalist and, unlike the prime minister, he supports a position which can be loosely described as special status for Quebec within confederation. Moreover, failing successful negotiations with Ottawa to achieve his goals for Quebec, Ryan is as likely a candidate to lead Quebec from confederation as Rene Levesque.

It is in compelling its readers to look realistically at our present situation that the Simeon book is valuable. Neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have much to say of value on the subject beyond the fact that both are determined to keep the country together. We do not yet know how they propose to do this, although one is compelled to assume that they assume Quebec will stay and will be a province like the others, rejoicing in the many new varieties of institution our constitution will spot as evidence of Ottawa's almost 'born again' rediscovery of some old truths about federalism.

The trouble with all this is that it doesn't honestly confront the reality of Quebec departing, and doesn't accept the reality of Canada never again being what it was when Pierre Elliott Trudeau first made known his monomania from the front benches of the House of Commons. And because no one is thinking of remaking Canada because it is simpler to think of preserving Canada, the Liberals will sweep back to power because most voters will see that only Trudeau can save us. The irony is delicious because, of course, only Trudeau could have brought us to this condition. Few men in power have ever displayed the intellectual rigidity he has.

Just Thin Smile

Terrified by the thought of taking a different stand, one that would amount to saying the old Canada is dead, therefore let us build a new one, both Joe Clark and Ed Broadbent are left with nothing but a thin smile and the same policy on confederation as the Liberals. They might do well to read this book and perhaps the Butler one as well. It may then be borne in upon them that Canada Mk II is going to emerge either with or without their involvement. While neither will win the election, they will at least have the comfort of saying in a year or two that they were right and Trudeau was wrong because, of course, he really is.

'Man Who's Made for History'

By WILLIAM JOHNSON

Claude Ryan is the new leader of the Quebec Liberals, and this is the first of many books to be written on a man who seems made for history.

Aurelien Leclerc's book came off the printing press on March 20. What luck! But it's not a quickie. Leclerc picked up more biographical information about Ryan than you will find anywhere else. There is much on Ryan's mother, Blandine Dorion, who married a ne'er do well, Henri-Albert Ryan, who was of half-French, half-Irish origin. The father, prone to drink, abandoned the family when Claude was about 3. He died in 1960.

Claude, despite his name, was brought up in an all-French environment, but his mother had studied at a convent in Ottawa and had learned good English at the insistence of her own father, a real estate broker from Lachute.

The family was poor — on welfare part of the time. Yet the mother emerges as a prototype of the French-Canadian woman whose own life is tragic from childhood, who can have little to live for in her own generation, but who lives fiercely for her children. She believes in her family, her religion, in self-sacrifice, in uncompromising uprightness. When the boys in the neighborhood pick on her three sons she heads down to the police station and has them escorted to school for a week by the law.

Claude is described by Leclerc as a child who skips several grades at school, who knows all the answers effortlessly, who is independent-minded and loves to argue with his teachers. On arrival at school each morning the first thing he did, to the annoyance of his teachers, was read Le Devoir.

The psychological portrait of Ryan as a man depends mostly in his writings. All his life, it seems, Ryan was looking at the world around him and trying to make sense of it on paper.

After graduation from college, Ryan worked for the bishops heading up the lay Catholic Action movement, from 1945 until he left to become an editorial writer for Le Devoir in 1962. Much of his work was writing, giving advice to people in the movement on how to adapt Christian spirituality to their everyday lives.

RYAN

Leclerc stresses the influence on Ryan of the British Catholic humanist, John Henry Newman, whose books were Ryan's favorite bedtime reading, according to Leclerc. He attributes to Newman's influence Ryan's suspicious attitude towards French-Canadian nationalism and Ryan's giving greater importance to freedom and to the individual than to the nation. Ryan, he says, "adheres to the values of Anglo-Saxon 19th century liberalism, which will lead him to the rejection of Quebec nationalism of an independentist character."

Claude Ryan, that big, awkward figure, does not get up off the page and walk. Leclerc lacks the gift of the novelist and he has not succeeded in bringing together into a whole man — seen in proportion against the background of his time — all the descriptive mass of detail he has collected. But he has done a valuable and intelligent job of fact-gathering.

Anyone wanting to form a personal opinion about Claude Ryan could not do better than to start by reading this book.

E. D. WARD-HARRIS

After nineteen years, Huxley essays have the ring of truth

Nothing is more delicious than pleasurable anticipation, but regretfully what we anticipate seldom occurs. What generally happens is what we least expect. Relating this truism to reading I have learned the wisdom of not expecting too much from any book I pick up. In this way disappointment is lessened, and if one is unexpectedly gratified pleasure is heightened.

I certainly didn't expect very much when I opened The Human Situation, a collection of essays by the late Aldous Huxley, delivered in the form of lectures at the University of California at Santa Barbara way back in 1959.

Huxley, as we know from Sybille Bedford's biography, was exceedingly generous with his time and money and, despite his vast output and great success, was consequently perennialy hard-up and eager to turn everything he wrote into hard cash as quickly as possible. So why have these essays been gathering dust for 19 years?

The possible explanation is that Huxley realized that he was delivering to his student audience a general summing-up of his philosophy, thoughts previously expressed in books and articles, and therefore unacceptable to those who were accustomed to expecting and receiving original views from him.

★ ★ ★

As it happens, these essays have not only stood the test of time, they are if anything more pertinent today than they must have seemed to his Santa Barbara audiences because they contain fundamental truths which to a 1959 audience may well have been regarded as irrelevant to the times.

I don't know who first realized the value of publishing these lectures now, but I suspect it was Dr. Piero Ferrucci of the University of Florence, who has edited them, and who happens to be the nephew of Huxley's widow, Laura Archera. Anyway, whoever made the decision deserves our thanks.

Because Aldous Huxley wrote so prolifically about so many things he did not, I think, receive during his lifetime the recognition that was his due. For some reason a prophet — and Huxley was a prophet — who descends the mountain at rare intervals with his tablets is taken more seriously than one who lives on the plains and is seen to use his chisel frequently. Wisdom, as Toynbee and Russell learned to their cost, is more highly prized when rationed.

The Santa Barbara lectures were remarkable for their breadth of scholarship and vision. Huxley's theme was man's relationship with his planet and he raised questions which have become, as he foresaw, crucial to the survival of civilization.

He began the series with the biological foundations — the state of the planet, population, heredity in relation to environment. Then he went on to what he called the great determiner of modern civilization — technique in every field of human activity and its effects on the social and political order. Finally, he passed to the individual and his potentialities, and what we might perhaps do about their realization.

It was an impossibly large project, and Huxley realized this, but it is clear that he believed it worth undertaking even inadequately as an antidote to academic specialization and fragmentation. A little learning is a dangerous thing but, he stressed, a great deal of highly specialized learning may be sometimes even more dangerous.

The first lecture dealt with education in general. Huxley held that co-ordination of science and the humanities by means of an historical approach is not enough. He called for an approach in terms of fundamental human problems, the bringing together of information from many completely isolated disciplines in order to create a thoroughly integrated form of education.

His student audience, all trained to believe they must specialize or go under, and all subjected to the absolutely catastrophic vocabulary of textbooks, must have been puzzled, and any professor listening in probably scoffed at such idealism.

What Huxley did subsequently probably couldn't have been accomplished by any other modern man of letters. He proceeded, in lecture after lecture, to prove that what he pleaded for was eminently possible by displaying his astonishing intellectual range, his profound knowledge of literature, science and philosophy in a virtuoso performance that showed the extraordinary clarity and penetration of his thinking.

As a man way ahead of his time, he expressed concern with the social, economic and ecological problems that are now facing mankind. He raised the alarm about the deterioration of our environment and emphasized the intimacy of the connection between man and nature, and between mind and body.

To make his points he ranged far and wide, discussing among other subjects religion, mysticism, eugenics, personal freedom, the nature of art, of language, of imagination, and the unconscious (he was deeply and constructively critical of Freud and Jung). And in every instance he illuminated the subject and suggested new approaches and alternative solutions.

The lectures must have been highly stimulating, for Huxley had a wonderful platform presence — his voice had an almost mesmeric quality, and he possessed charm, modesty and a deep sincerity. But it is difficult to retain what you hear at a lecture, and for that reason alone this book is welcome, for it permits one to read, and read again, wisdom that reveals one's own intellectual inadequacies, but which compels one to seek greater knowledge.

The essays do not supply the complete answer to anything. They weren't meant to. They expose one to the mind of a man of profound learning. In the way that Bacon's essays, Shakespeare's plays, and the works of the greater poets cause one to delve deeper into oneself, so the much under-rated Huxley had the capacity to impart to his listeners and readers a wish to emulate him in viewing all learning as a continuous and exciting intellectual quest.

Nowhere in his writings is this more apparent than in The Human Situation, because he covers so much ground and because he so obviously enjoyed the challenge of condensing the eternal verities in the hope of handing on the torch to young, receptive minds.

He was a realistic idealist, an exceptional being in this cynical, tormented world ruled by the small-minded specialists he so rightly deplored.

In conclusion, I must ask you to remember that these essays were desinged specifically to provoke young people into seeking knowledge in all fields to gain an integrated education. Huxley was merely opening windows, pointing the way, whetting the appetite, for only by seeking knowledge for its own sake, and then learning to apply it, can a depth of understanding be attained. For that very reason I found The Human Situation stimulating. For the same reason some may well find it tantalizing.

THE HUMAN SITUATION, by Aldous Huxley. Clarke, Irwin. $15.50.

Borges: Mesmeric Tales by the Master

By JULIAN REID

Jorge Luis Borges is one of the most remarkable writers of our time — and one of the most difficult to categorize. For, like every really great creator, this unrelentingly introspective Argentinian is at once unique and protean: a universe to himself, an entire inexhaustible Library of Babel bound up in the compass of a few slender volumes.

Almost alone among today's master prosifiers, Borges is a miniaturist pure and simple; he has yet to write a story that occupies more than a couple of dozen pages. And yet, paradoxically, he is obsessed with the interminable and the infinite — two favorite themes to which no other writer has done fuller justice than he has, in those vertiginously infolding literary labyrinths he delights in spinning.

This is the metaphysical Borges — by no means the only one of his several literary faces, but certainly the most distinctive and the one for which he is best known outside his own country. The closest equivalent I can think of in any other medium is the Dutch engraver M. C. Escher, with his intricately disorienting optical phantasias. Borges' metaphysical fictions and brief parables are equally ambiguous and unsettling, and similarly mesmeric in their abiding fascination.

The vast majority of these remarkable creations were produced between 1935 and 1953, when growning blindness compelled Borges to forsake fiction for poetry and short parables. And when, at last, he returned to the short story in his 1970 volume, Doctor Brodie's Report, it was to a different kind of fiction — stark, anecdotal, and at least superficially naturalistic — technically every bit as masterful as his earlier works, but for me at least distinctly less compelling.

His new collection, The Book of Sand, represents something of a compromise between these two contrasting modes. Here, ably rendered into English by their author's favored translator, Norman Thomas di Giovanni, are 13 recent tales — all quintessentially Borgesian, and almost all more or less fantastical and metaphysical in orientation. "Blind man's exercises," Borges himself calls them: a few "variations on favorite themes," the introspective musings of an old man in a Buenos Aires suburb.

They are, of course, a great deal more than merely that. For their craftsmanship, as usual, is meticulous; and their themes, characteristically, are profoundly, even archetypally, suggestive. Here, for instance, is a book with an infinite number of pages, and here a miraculous coin with only one side; here an old man's encounter with his callow young alter ego, and here a love-affair that literally overreaches the bonds of time; here a secret sect of unspeakably heretical true believers, and here a Word of words which has a transcendent power over its speakers. How deeply and reassuringly Borgesian are such conceits!

And yet, on the whole, the treatment he gives them is starkly restrained — much closer to the deceptively plain naturlism of Doctor Brodie's Report than to the intricately mannered surfaces of Borges' earlier metaphysical exercises, which he himself has chosen to label "baroque." (As indeed they are; but only in the sense that the music of Bach or Vivaldi is baroque, being at once elaborately measured and mathematically precise.)

The blend is one their author seems to find exceptionally satisfying; but for me, alas, it proves subtly disappointing. Not that any of these tales are lacking in meticulous craftsmanship — but alongside their predecessors they strike me as somewhat thin. To me, the "baroque" quality of Borges' earlier style was an essential element in its fascination, imbuing his fantasies with a kind of hallucinatory substance. In its absence, they seem somehow short a dimension, and are no longer as hauntingly compelling as their precursors.

In all fairness, it should be noted that Borges himself thinks otherwise, even going so far as to assert that one of the stories here, "The Congress," is the single work of fiction by which he would most like to be remembered. So no admirer should allow himself to be deterred from sampling The Book of Sand by my own, perhaps purely personal, critical qualms.

But if you are a newcomer to the fabled world of Borges, I would suggest that you start elsewhere — perhaps with that definitive collection, The Aleph and Other Stories. For at his best he is in a class by himself, a writer of supreme accomplishments in a genre of his own making.
